New Chapter 59, Recreational Boating Law and Liability. There are millions of registered boaters in the United States, with the number of registrations increasing each year. With the increased number of recreational boaters, there is also a rise in the incidence of boating accidents and deaths. The top five contributing factors to the accidents were boat operator inattention, operator inexperience, excessive speed, improper lookout, and alcohol consumption. Alcohol consumption continues to be of major concern in fatal accidents and is the leading factor in the number of deaths. Additionally, a large number of boat operators involved in accidents have not received boat safety instruction. With the increase in boating accidents that cause property damage, injuries, and deaths, there is also an expansion of litigation.
