Preface

These instructions represent the work of the Task Force on Jury Instructions, appointed by Chief Justice Ronald M. George in 1997. Our charge was to write instructions that are both legally accurate and understandable to the average juror. The eight-year effort addressed a need for instructions written in plain English and responded to the specific recommendation of the Blue Ribbon Commission on Jury System Improvement that observed “jury instructions as presently given in California and elsewhere are, on occasion, simply impenetrable to the ordinary juror.”¹

The reason instructions are so often impenetrable is that they are based on the language of case law and statutes written by and for a specialized legal audience and expressed in terms of art that have evolved through multiple languages, in many countries, over several centuries. We do not seek to lose either the majesty of the law or the rich language in which lawyers and judges have expressed it. However, our work reflects a belief that sound communication takes into account the audience to which it is addressed. Jurors perform an essential service in our democracy. We are absolutely dependent upon them to apply the law fairly and accurately. In order to do so, they must be able to understand the instructions they are asked to follow.

These instructions were prepared by a statewide committee of justices from the Court of Appeal, trial court judges, attorneys, academicians, and lay people. They are approved by the Judicial Council as the state’s official instructions pursuant to the California Rules of Court.² The Rules of Court strongly encourage their use.³

Each instruction began with the preparation of an initial draft, followed by subcommittee review and full committee consideration. The task force was assisted by a remarkable group of staff attorneys that included Robin Seeley, Natasha Minsker, Jeffrey Shea, Melissa Johnson, Elizabeth Givens, and Lisa Lockyer. Throughout our multi-year effort, drafts were repeatedly circulated for public comment. The task force reviewed thousands of observations, and this final product reflects the input of judges and lawyers throughout California. We are grateful for the willingness of prosecutors, defense counsel, appellate specialists, judges, and justices to share their insights and the benefit of their experience.

A list of people and organizations who have contributed to this undertaking follows this preface; we apologize to anyone who has been omitted through oversight.

The official publisher of this work is LexisNexis Matthew Bender. Its representatives have worked closely with us to prepare the instructions and to create a software platform for their usage. We have been greatly aided by their efficiency, professionalism, and commitment to excellence. We particularly recognize Bruce Greenlee for his tireless efforts in this regard.

We gratefully acknowledge our predecessor. The Committee on Standard Jury Instructions, Criminal, of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, published the first edition of California Jury Instructions, Criminal (CALJIC) in 1946. For six decades, their efforts have helped guide the deliberations of California jurors. While we have taken a very different approach to the drafting of instructions, the tremendous contribution the CALJIC committee has made to the California justice system cannot be overestimated.

Like the law on which they are based, these instructions will continue to change. This evolution will come not only through appellate decisions and legislation but also through the observations and comments of the legal community. The Judicial Council's Advisory Committee on Criminal Jury Instructions, charged with maintaining these instructions, welcomes your comments and suggestions for modification.

Finally, I wish to express my personal appreciation for the leadership of Chief Justice George whose vision and commitment has infused this project from its inception and to the remarkable men and women who so tirelessly served on the task force.

Preface to CALCRIM Updates

This edition of CALCRIM includes a number of additions and changes to the instructions that were first published in 2005. In providing these updates, the Judicial Council Advisory Committee on Criminal Jury Instructions is fulfilling its charge to ensure that CALCRIM reflects all changes in the law.

In addition to maintaining the legal accuracy of CALCRIM, the committee carefully considered and implemented suggestions from CALCRIM users. Responding to feedback from users is consistent with the Advisory Committee's goal to maintain CALCRIM as the work product of the legal community. We hope that our many contributors view our role in the same way and will continue to support us.

Guide for Using Judicial Council of California Criminal Jury Instructions (“CALCRIM”)

The Judicial Council jury instructions are accurate, designed to be easy to understand, and easy to use. This guide provides an introduction to the instructions and explains conventions and features that will assist in their use.

In order to fulfill its mandate pursuant to rule 10.59 of the California Rules of Court¹ to maintain the criminal jury instructions, members of the advisory committee meet several times a year to consider changes in statutes, appellate opinions, and suggestions from practitioners. It bears emphasis that when the committee proposes changing a jury instruction, that does not necessarily mean the previous version of the instruction was incorrect. Often the committee proposes changes for reasons of style, consistency among similar instructions, and to improve clarity.

Judicial Council Instructions Endorsed by Rule of Court

Rule 2.1050 of the California Rules of Court provides:

The California jury instructions approved by the Judicial Council are the official instructions for use in the state of California. . . [¶] The Judicial Council endorses these instructions for use and makes every effort to ensure that they accurately state existing law. . . [¶] Use of the Judicial Council instructions is strongly encouraged.

The California Supreme Court acknowledged CALCRIM’s status as the state’s official pattern jury instructions in People v. Ramirez (2021) 10 Cal.5th 983, 1008, fn.5 [274 Cal.Rptr.3d 309, 479 P.3d 797].

Using the Instructions

Bench Notes

The text of each instruction is followed by a section in the Bench Notes titled “Instructional Duty,” which alerts the user to any sua sponte duties to instruct and special circumstances raised by the instruction. It may also include references to other instructions that should or should not be used. In some instances, the directions include suggestions for modification. In the “Authority” section, all of the pertinent sources for the instruction are listed. Some of the instructions also have sections containing “Related Issues” and “Commentary.” The Bench Notes also refer to any relevant lesser included offenses. Secondary sources appear at the end of instructions. The official publisher, and not the Judicial Council, is responsible for updating the citations for secondary sources. Users should consult the Bench Notes before using an instruction.

Italicized notes between angle brackets in the language of the instruction itself signal important issues or choices. For example, in instruction 1750, Receiving Stolen Property, optional element 3 is introduced thus: <Give element 3 when instructing on knowledge of presence of property; see Bench Notes>.

Multiple-Defendant and Multiple-Count Cases

These instructions were drafted for the common case in which a single defendant is on trial. The HotDocs document assembly program from the Judicial Council's official publisher, LexisNexis, will modify the instructions for use in multi-defendant cases. It will also allow the user to name the defendants charged in a particular instruction if the instruction applies only to some of the defendants on trial in the case.

It is impossible to predict the possible fact combinations that may be present when a crime is charged multiple times or committed by different defendants against different victims involving different facts. Thus, when an instruction is being used for more than one count and the factual basis for the instruction is different for the different counts, the user will need to modify the instruction as appropriate.

Related California Jury Instructions, Criminal (CALJIC)

The CALJIC and CALCRIM instructions should never be used together. While the legal principles are obviously the same, the organization of concepts is approached differently. Mixing the two sets of instructions into a unified whole cannot be done and may result in omissions or confusion that could severely compromise clarity and accuracy. Nevertheless, for convenient reference this publication includes tables of related CALJIC instructions.

Titles and Definitions

The titles of the instructions are directed to lawyers and sometimes use words and phrases not used in the instructions themselves. The title is not a part of the instruction. The titles may be removed before presentation to the jury.

The instructions avoid separate definitions of legal terms whenever possible. Instead, definitions have been incorporated into the language of the instructions in which the terms appear. When a definition is lengthy, a cross-reference to that definition is provided.

Defined terms are printed in italics in the text of the definition.

Alternatives vs. Options

When the user must choose one of two or more options in order to complete the instruction, the choice of necessary alternatives is presented in parentheses thus: When the defendant acted, George Jones was performing (his/her) duties as a school employee.

The instructions use brackets to provide optional choices that may be necessary or appropriate, depending on the individual circumstances of the case: [If you find that George Jones threatened or harmed the defendant [or others] in the past, you may consider that information in evaluating the defendant's beliefs.]

Finally, both parentheses and brackets may appear in the same sentence to indicate options that arise depending on which necessary alternatives are selected: [It is not required that the person killed be the (victim/ intended victim) of the (felony/[or] felonies).]

General and Specific Intent

The instructions do not use the terms general and specific intent because while these terms are very familiar to judges and lawyers, they are novel and often confusing to many jurors. Instead, if the defendant must specifically intend to commit an act, the particular intent required is expressed without using the term of art “specific intent.” Instructions 250–254 provide jurors with additional guidance on specific vs. general intent crimes and the union of act and intent.

Organization of the Instructions

The instructions are organized into 24 series, which reflect broad categories of crime (e.g., Homicide) and other components of the trial (e.g., Evidence). The series, and the instructions within each series, are presented in the order in which they are likely to be given in an actual trial. As a result, greater offenses (like DUI with injury) come before lesser offenses (DUI). All of the defenses are grouped together at the end of the instructions, rather than dispersed throughout. The misdemeanors are placed within the category of instructions to which they belong, so simple battery is found with the other battery instructions rather than in a stand-alone misdemeanor section.

Lesser Included Offenses

Users may wish to modify instructions used to explain lesser included offenses by replacing the standard introductory sentence, “The defendant is charged with _____” with “The crime of _____ (e.g., false imprisonment) is a lesser offense than the crime of _____ (e.g., kidnapping)” to amplify the explanation provided in instructions 3517–3519: “_____ <insert crime> is a lesser crime of _____ <insert crime> [charged in Count _____].”

When giving the lesser included offense instructions 640 and 641 (homicide) or instructions 3517–3519 (non-homicide), no further modification of the corresponding instructions on lesser crimes is necessary to comply with the requirements of People v. Dewberry (1959) 51 Cal.2d 548.

Burden of Production/Burden of Proof

The instructions never refer to the “burden of producing evidence.” The drafters concluded that it is the court’s decision whether the party has met the burden of production. If the burden is not met, no further instruction is necessary. The question for the jury is whether a party has met its properly allocated burden based on the evidence received.

Instruction 103 on Reasonable Doubt states, “Whenever I tell you the People must prove something, I mean they must prove it beyond a reasonable doubt [unless I specifically tell you otherwise].” Thus, when the concept of reasonable doubt is explained and defined, the jury is told that it is the standard that applies to every issue the People must prove, unless the court specifically informs the jury otherwise.

Sentencing Factors and Enhancement

Because the law is rapidly evolving regarding when sentencing factors and enhancements must be submitted to the jury, we have provided “template” instructions 3250 and 3251 so that the court may tailor an appropriate instruction that corresponds to this emerging body of law.

Personal Pronouns

Many instructions include an option to insert the personal pronouns “he/she,” “his/her,” or “him/her.” The committee does not intend these options to be limiting. It is the policy of the State of California that nonbinary people are entitled to full legal recognition and equal treatment under the law. In accordance with this policy, attorneys and courts should ensure that they are using an individual’s personal pronouns. The court has the option to change the pronouns to “they/them” with care given to avoiding confusion in multiple defendant cases.

Revision Dates

In previous editions, the revision dates listed underneath the instructional language indicated when any text in the instruction had been updated, whether related to the instructional language or the bench notes and other commentaries. Beginning with the 2024 edition, an asterisk at the end of the revision date signifies that only the bench notes and other commentaries were updated during that publication cycle. A revision date without an asterisk indicates that the instructional text (as well as the bench notes and other commentaries, if applicable) were revised.
