

ACKNOWLEDGMENT

In any work of this sort, we owe an enormous debt to others too numerous to name. All our teachers and mentors, our colleagues at the bench and bar, and our friends and family have contributed to and shaped this project. Without their consistent professionalism and support, this book would be of little worth.

We here express our profound respect to Professor Kenneth B. Hughes, the author of the original treatise. We also express our thanks to Assistant United States Attorney Thomas Frangillo, with whose kind permission we have adapted his excellent article on co-conspirator hearsay.

Elizabeth Sonnenberg prepared portions of the manuscript, and we are grateful for her assistance. Mara E. Pollets made significant contributions in research, organization and drafting portions of the treatise. Mara's skill and acumen in editing her father's work is worthy of note.

Judge Young acknowledges the consistent intellectual support of his colleagues of the United States District Court.

Our thanks also to our editor at Thompson Reuters, Frank Wozniak. Without your vision, support and patience this project could never have left the ground or been completed.

Finally, we express our profound thanks and admiration to our spouses, Beverly, Wendy, and Karen. Once again, this project is as much yours as it ours. We know it-and you should too.
