Highlights of the 2025–2026 Edition

The 2025-26 Edition of Nebraska Appellate Practice and Procedure has been updated to include citations to relevant recent Nebraska Supreme Court and Nebraska Court of Appeals decisions, providing updated case citations for propositions of law and procedure throughout the manual.

- Inclusion of modifications to the Nebraska Court Rules of Appellate Practice regarding the filing of notice when challenging the constitutionality of a statute and the rights of the Attorney General to respond and present argument; and
- Updated case citations for propositions of law and procedure throughout the manual.

About the Author

Daniel L. Real served as a judicial staff attorney for the Nebraska Court of Appeals for 20 years. He has taught at Creighton School of Law for more than 20 years, teaching required legal analysis and writing courses, upper level advanced analysis and writing courses, Professional Responsibility, Commercial Contracts, and Comprehensive Review. Among his courses is the capstone legal analysis and writing course, which focuses on appellate advocacy, brief writing, and oral argument. He has been a coach for Creighton School of Law's highly successful third year National Moot Court Teams competing in appellate advocacy competitions for more than 10 years. He is a member of the Appellate Practice Section of the Nebraska State Bar Association, and was previously one of the organizing editors for the NSBA Appellate Practice Manual. He is also a contributing editor on the Appellate Advocacy Blog, a legal blog on the law professors blog network. He has presented a number of continuing legal education programs to bar associations in several states concerning effective advocacy.

Acknowledgments

The author acknowledges the significant work and contributions of his research assistants, Creighton School of Law students Adrian Pascotto and Zach Diehl, without whom this work would not have been possible. Their efforts researching and editing cannot be overstated. Similarly, Mark Hill provided his insight and advice on the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals chapter; another immense help that cannot be overstated.

The author also extends a note of acknowledgment to his wife, Heather, whose support of all of his professional endeavors makes them possible. This project necessarily consumed significant time, energy, and focus, and her support and encouragement was vital to its completion.

The author also acknowledges the work of John T. Grant and Robert M. Slovek in authoring the original version of this practice and procedure handbook in 1995. Their work served as an inspiration and, at times, a blueprint for portions of the modern version of the handbook.
