§ ID:1 Introduction

Indonesia continues its trajectory as a growing democracy with the October 2014 election of Joko Widodo (affectionately known as "Jokowi") as President amidst an intensely contested campaign. Jokowi has a strong reformist and civil service accountability background, having served as the Mayor of the Central Java city of Solo and, up until his Presidency, as the Governor of Jakarta. Whilst Jokowi inevitably faces bureaucratic and structural headwinds during his presidency, his focused and progressive attitude has steered Indonesia along the path of ongoing economic development (including a more grass roots approach to living conditions).

Being elected for the second time in a democracy is a clear indication that Jokowi has demonstrated his leadership in directing Indonesia to an advanced economic development path. This is evidenced by the large number of infrastructure developments, as well as the increase of foreign investment in Indonesia. Foreign investment in 2021 has increased by 14.0% compared to 2020 from Rp 98.0 trillion to Rp 111.7 trillion. The realization of foreign direct investment reached 50.8% of the realization in 2021.[1]

Having recovered from the Asian downturn of the late 1990s and largely spared from the global financial crisis (due mainly to large internal markets and relative insulation from "toxic loans"), Indonesia has become increasingly attractive as a destination for foreign investment due to its vast natural resources, developing consumer economy and its potential as a low-cost manufacturing centre. In 2009 (a year in which most countries were still in economic stagnation and recovery), Indonesia boasted a 4.5% GDP growth rate transforming it into one of the most important economies in Asia. This positive growth rate continued in 2017, when GDP growth in Indonesia was 5,1%. Indonesia's GDP growth in 2019 was 5.02 percent, slightly lower than the 2018 achievement of 5.17 percent. Furthermore, Moody's, Fitch and Standard and Poors (S&P) have upgraded Indonesia's sovereign credit rating to investment grade. On 21 December 2017, Fitch Rating affirmed Indonesia's sovereign credit rating at BBB, and Moodys sovereign credit rating for Indonesia was upgraded to Baa2 on 13 April 2018. As 5 June 2018, S&P affirmed Indonesia's sovereign credit rating at the investment grade of BBB-. Standard and Poor's (S&P) upgraded the Sovereign Credit Rating of the Republic of Indonesia from BBB-/ Stable Outlook to BBB/Stable Outlook, as announced on May 31st, 2019.[2]

In recent years (coupled with the downturn in the resources cycle), Indonesia's growth has slightly dropped from 6% to 5.02%.

Recent years have seen various governmental efforts to modernize Indonesia's regulatory environment to assist in Indonesia's economic recovery. Updated intellectual property laws, competition laws, anti-corruption measures, banking and capital market laws, and the introduction of the "single investment window" for foreign direct investment are all examples of the ongoing reform effort. Due to its recent economic and political stability, Indonesia now represents one of Asia's best potential growth opportunities in the eyes of many investors.

This Country Commentary focuses on the Indonesian capital market. This is because the capital market constitutes the main securities market in Indonesia.

Presently, capital market regulation in Indonesia is based on a number of legislative instruments, the principal one being the Capital Market Law 1995 (Undang-Undang Pasar Modal, Law No. 8 of 1995). This legislation came into effect on 1 January 1996. It revoked the Stock Exchange Law (Undang-Undang Bursa, Law No. 15 of 1952).

The scope of the Capital Market Law 1995 is wide. It enumerates the powers of the main regulatory body, until recently known as the Capital Market and Financial Institutions Supervisory Agency (Badan Pengawas Pasar Modal dan Lembaga Keuangan or Bapepam), market institutions such as the Indonesia Stock Exchange (IDX), the role of market participants such as brokers, and the conduct of market transactions.

The present legal framework of the Indonesian capital market is shaped by the Capital Market Law 1995 as the principal legislation. Most of the pre-1996 regulations have been revoked and replaced by regulations issued by Bapepam from 1996 up to 2013 and now OJK (defined below) from 1 January 2013.

Since 2002, the Indonesian authorities have been working on proposals to amend the Capital Market Law 1995. In mid-2003, proposed amendments were submitted to the Indonesian parliament to transfer the role of Bapepam to a new Financial Services Authority (Otoritas Jasa Keuangan or "OJK").

[2] https://www.bi.go.id/en/iru/economic-market-data/Pages/SnP-Upgrades-Indonesias-Sovereign-Credit-Rating-to-BBB-Stable-Outlook-Investment-Grade.aspx.

In 2004, Law No. 23 of 1999 on Bank Indonesia was amended by Law No. 3 of 2004 (and more recently by Law No. 6 of 2009) to provide for the establishment of the OJK by 31 December 2010 as a "super regulator" across the banking, capital markets and non-bank financial institutions space in Indonesia.

The process of establishing the OJK formally commenced in July 2010 with a draft bill put before the Indonesian parliament for discussion.

On 22 November 2011, Law No. 21 of 2011 on the Financial Services Authority (OJK Law) came into effect, to establish the OJK as the primary licensing, investigative and supervisory body across the entire financial services sector with a good deal of implementation powers delegated to its (Presidentially appointed) Board of Commissioners.

On 31 December 2012, the functions and authorities of the Ministry of Finance that were performed by Bapepam were transferred to the OJK. Bank Indonesia's authority over the regulation of the banking industry (other than macroeconomic and treasury legislation) was also transferred to the OJK on 31 December 2013. The OJK Law does not repeal and replace previous legislation in the banking and/or financial sector provided the legislation does not conflict with the Bill or has not been replaced by the OJK.

§ ID:2 History of Indonesia's capital market

The concept of a capital market was introduced in Indonesia during the era of Dutch colonization, when the Vereniging voor de Effecten Handel was established in Batavia (now Jakarta). The securities traded at that time were the shares and bonds of Dutch companies operating in Indonesia. In 1925, two more stock exchanges were established in Semarang and Surabaya. However, with the arrival of World War II, the Dutch Indies Government restricted capital market activities to Batavia. During the Japanese occupation, all activities on the stock exchange halted.

The Indonesian authorities re-activated capital market activities after Indonesia's independence. A new Stock Exchange Law was ratified on September 26, 1952. Coordination of capital market activities was given to the Union of Money and Securities Traders (Perserikatan Pedagang Uang dan Efek-Efek or PPUE), which consisted of three government banks and several securities dealers.

There was modest stock exchange activity from 1954 to 1956, when the Government issued Bank Industri Negara bonds. However, during the next ten years, due to inflation, massive currency devaluations (for example, Rp. 1,000 became Rp. 1 during this time), and an unstable economy, capital market activities were virtually non-existent.

On 26 July 1968, Bank Indonesia, the Indonesian central bank, formed a Preparatory Team to consider reinvigorating and establishing the money market and capital market. The purpose of the Preparatory Team was to collect data and provide recommendations to the Governor of Bank Indonesia on how best to develop a capital market in Indonesia and on how best to reactivate the stock exchange.

The next major step occurred in 1976 with the issuing of a Presidential Decree creating the Capital Market Executive Board (Badan Pelaksana Pasar Modal, also Bapepam in its acronym). The Presidential Decree gave tax facilities to encourage public companies to go public. Bapepam was formed as a unit within the Department of Finance. Its duties were to assist the Minister of Finance in supervising the development of both the money market and the capital market. Its original purposes included training in the operation of national and international money markets and capital markets, the evaluation of companies wishing to sell shares to the public, the operation of an effective and efficient stock exchange, and the monitoring of the development of companies which sell shares through capital markets.

On 10 August 1977, concurrently with the initial public offering of PT Semen Cibinong, President Soeharto officially re-opened the Jakarta Stock Exchange. In 1977, 13 foreign-owned companies listed on the Jakarta Stock Exchange, however, it was not until the late 1980's that the capital market in Indonesia began to grow in earnest, marked by the establishment of the Surabaya Stock Exchange (SSX), located in Indonesia's second largest city, Surabaya, in 1989. At that time, Bapepam had a dual function. It operated the Jakarta Stock Exchange and supervised the capital markets.

By Presidential Decree No. 53 of 1990, Concerning Capital Markets, Bapepam was reconstituted to become the Capital Market Supervisory Board (Badan Pengawas Pasar Modal, also abbreviated to Bapepam). Its dual function of operating the JSX and supervising the capital market was reduced to the single function of supervising the capital market. Subsequently, Bapepam transferred operation of all activities pertaining to the Jakarta Stock Exchange, including all its assets, to PT Bursa Efek Jakarta, a new limited liability company licensed to operate the Jakarta Stock Exchange (JSX). This step marked the successful privatization of the JSX.

A significant milestone in Indonesia's capital market's history occurred in 2007 when the shareholders of the SSX and JSX agreed to consolidate SSX into JSX, which later become the Indonesia Stock Exchange and PT Bursa Efek Jakarta was re-named PT Bursa Efek Indonesia.

Whilst there have been high level comments about the prospect of a regional stock exchange off the back of the ASEAN economic community integration starting from 2015, the likelihood of a pan-regional bourse still looks a long way off.

§ ID:3 The Capital Market Regulator

Articles 3-5 of the Capital Market Law 1995 list the following functions and responsibilities of the Capital Market Regulator (at that time known as Badan Pengawas Pasar Modal, shortened as Bapepam):

(i) the granting of:

(a) business licenses to stock exchanges, clearing and underwriting institutions, depository and settlement institutions, investment funds, securities companies, investment advisors and securities administration bureaus;

(b) individual licenses to representatives of underwriters, representatives of securities broker-dealers and representatives of investment managers; and

(c) approvals to custodian banks;

(ii) the registration of capital market supporting professionals and trust agents;

(v) the inspection and investigation of any party believed to be in alleged violation of the Capital Market Law 1995 and/or its implementing regulations;

(vi) the conditions necessary for any party to:

(b) take stipulated measures to remedy consequences arising from such advertisements or promotions;

(vii) the inspection of:

(a) public companies or issuers which have submitted or are obliged to submit a Registration Statement to Bapepam; or

(b) parties obliged to have business licenses, individual licenses, approvals or professional registrations pursuant to the Capital Market Law 1995;

(viii) the appointment of a party to conduct certain inspections under the authority granted to Bapepam in point (vii);

(ix) the publication of inspection findings;

(x) the suspension or cancellation of listed securities on a stock exchange or the suspension of any trading of specific securities for a certain period to protect the interests of investors;

(xi) the cessation of stock exchange trading activity for a certain period in the case of an emergency;

(xii) the examination of an appeal submitted by a party upon whom sanctions have been imposed by a stock exchange, clearing and underwriting institution, or depository and settlement Institution and the determination as to the revocation or confirmation of such sanctions;

(xiv) the implementation of measures to prevent loss to the public arising from capital market violations;

(xv) the provision of additional technical interpretations regarding the Capital Market Law 1995 or its implementing regulations;

(xvi) the determination of other instruments as securities where these are not otherwise covered by the Capital Market Law 1995; and (xvii) any other act required by the Capital Market Law 1995.

As preparation for the establishment of the OJK, in 2005 Bapepam was merged with the Ministry of Finance's Directorate General of Financial Institutions (in charge of non-bank financial institutions like insurance, pension funds, venture capital companies and finance companies), and it was renamed as Bapepam-LK (Badan Pengawas Pasar Modal & Lembaga Keuangan, i.e. the Capital Market & Financial Institutions Supervisory Agency).

In view of the establishment of the OJK, Bapepam-LK has ceased to exist and ceded these powers and responsibilities to the OJK on and from 31 December 2012.

§ ID:4 The Indonesia Stock Exchange

The transfer of the management, operations and assets of the JSX from Bapepam to PT Bursa Efek Jakarta saw the beginning of a spectacular rise in share trading and prices from the early 1990s to the end of 1995. In 1995, the volume of trading activity reached 10.1 billion shares (91% up on 1994) worth $14.4 billion (22% up on 1994).[1] The increased volume of share trading overwhelmed the JSXs manual trading system. On 22 May 1995 the JSX adopted an automated trading system (JATS) capable of settling anywhere from 50,000 to 500,000 transactions daily.

By mid-1997, just prior to the start of the Asian financial crisis, 325 companies had shares and bonds listed on the two stock exchanges the JSX and the SSX and the Indonesian capital market was firmly linked to the global capital market.[2] Also in 1997, Bapepam issued rules permitting the JSX to offer margin trading.

The Asian financial crisis, which began in mid-1997, had a dramatic impact on Indonesia. In the nine months after July 1997, the rupiah lost 76% of its value against the U.S. dollar. In U.S. dollar terms, by

March 1998 the JSX capitalization had shrunk to $19.2 billion from $95 billion the year before.[3]

To overcome the tumultuous conditions, the government, Bapepam and the stock exchanges took major steps to strengthen the capital market sector. These steps include a removal of the 49% cap on foreign investor ownership of public-listed shares; a host of state-owned companies being privatized and slated for privatization or partial-privatization through the stock exchanges; and the JSX continuing to develop its regulations to improve its performance as the leading stock exchange in Indonesia.

In July 2000, the JSX introduced scripless trading. This was aimed at improving market liquidity and also to minimize fraud and other misdemeanors involving the handling of physical share certificates. It has also enabled JSX to shorten the transaction and settlement period for trades. Subsequently, in 2002, JSX introduced remote trading to enable market participants to undertake transactions without having to be physically present on the trading floor. This initiative will improve market access, efficiency and the speed of trading transactions.

In 2005 a Disaster Recovery Center was put in place whilst a year later in 2006, a Business Contingency Plan procedure was implemented. Both developments improved the perception and credibility of Indonesia's capital market as well as introducing desirable risk management mechanisms.

To help investors assess securities, a rating agency PT Peringkat Efek Indonesia (Pefindo) was established in 1994. Issuers, especially of bonds, obtain a Pefindo rating to increase liquidity and marketability. In 1997, another rating agency PT Kasnic Duff & Phelps Credit Rating Indonesia was established. Its role was also to assess securities, conduct investment research and other activities pursuant to the Capital Market Law 1995. In 1999, this company was acquired by Moody's, and currently known as PT Moody's Indonesia.

Indonesia escaped relatively unscathed from the global financial turmoil that affected markets in 2008 and 2009. In January 2008 the Jakarta Composite Index (JCI) posted a new record high of 2,830.263 and although it dipped below 1,300 towards the end of 2008 and at the start of 2009, it had recovered to a healthy 2,534.356 on 30 December 2009. From 2010 to 2017, the JCI has grown from 3703.51 to 6,355.65. In 2020, there is a slight decrease, such that the number decreased to 6,325.406.[4]

Since 2009 the IDX has been one of the stand-out regional stock exchanges as shown in the table below.

Key indicators reflected healthy gains. IDX's End of Year Press Release issued on 30 December 2013 reported that market capitalization increased from Rp 4,127 trillion[5] in December 2012 to Rp. 7,033 trillion on 27 December 2013, resulting in a gain of 0.87%. The average volume of daily transactions on the IDX increased from Rp 4.54 trillion in 2012 to Rp 6.25 trillion in 2013 with the average daily stock trading value increasing by 37.68% during the same period. Since 2003, the number of investment funds (reksa dana) has increased from 182 to 916 by the end of 2013 while their net assets increased from Rp 72.8 trillion to Rp 221.2 trillion during the same period.

Running parallel with the main capital market on the IDX is the gradual growth of the syariah capital market (pasar modal syariah). Operating Islamic law principles including the prohibition of interest—the syariah capital market has seen steady growth in the number of issuers increasing from 6 in 2003 to 33 in 2013 and 426 as per January 2021. The separate stock index which tracks the syariah capital market, the Jakarta Islamic Index, has risen from 118.9 points at the close of 2003 to 585.6 points at the close of 2013.

Trading at the IDX is conducted under several broad categories. The first is regular automated trading through the JATS (Jakarta Automated Trading System) involving the continuous auction of shares, bonds and rights certificates. JATS-NextG was implemented in March 2009 which significantly improved the capability of the previous trading system (which, since June 2009, has the capacity to handle 500,000 transactions and 1,000,000 orders per day[6]). IDX has further upgraded the system on May 2018, increasing the capacity to handle 15,000,000 transactions and 7,500,000 orders per day. There is also a cash market and a negotiated market. Clearing and settlement are undertaken through the dedicated clearing and settlement institutions, PT Kliring Penjaminan Efek Indonesia (KPEI) and PT Kustodian Sentral Efek Indonesia (KSEI), respectively. Since 2019, the IDX settles transactions on a T+2 settlement period for the regular market.

[5]Based on an exchange rate of USD 1: Rp. 11,400, Rp. 1 trillion is equivalent to approximately USD 81 million.

Generally, investors pay a negotiated brokers commission of up to a maximum of 1% of the value of the transaction. Brokers in turn pay a transaction fee of 0.018% to the IDX in respect of such regular and cash market transactions. Brokers must deposit 0.009% of the value of each transaction guaranteed by KPEI (which is every regular and cash market transaction).

§ ID:5 Purchase of shares by foreign investors

Until August 1997, there were restrictions in place which limited the extent to which foreign parties can purchase shares through the JSX. Where these applied, generally, a foreign party could not own more than 49% of the total listed shares of a company.

In September 1997, after the onset of the Asian financial crisis, the Minister of Finance issued a decree (Minister of Finance Decree No. 467/KMK.010/1997) and Bapepam issued a regulation (Bapepam Regulation No. S-213/PM/1997) which effectively removed these limits except in the case of banking companies.

In May 1999, a new Government Regulation No. 29 of 1999 was enacted which implemented the provisions of the 1998 amendments to the Banking Law 1992 (Undang-Undang Perbankan, Law No. 7 of 1992). Pursuant to this new regulation, foreign ownership of banking shares is generally regulated as follows:

- A foreign party through direct placement or through stock exchange transactions is permitted to own up to a maximum of 99% of the total number of a banks issued shares.
- A foreign party is permitted to own through stock exchange transactions up to 100% of a bank's shares listed on the stock exchange.
- A bank can list on a stock exchange up to 99% of its issued shares.
- At least 1% of a bank's issued shares which are not listed on a stock exchange must be owned by an Indonesian citizen or company.

Indonesia's foreign direct investment regime is governed by Law No. 25 of 2007 on Capital Investment (the Investment Law). Under [6]PT Bursa Efek Indonesia 2009 Annual Report.

Article 12 of the Investment Law the President may specify fields of business which are open to foreign investment, closed to foreign investment or open subject to certain conditions. The Presidential Regulation in which this is done is generally known as the "Negative List" and is updated from time to time as policies change.

Historically, the Negative List has never applied to foreign investment in listed companies. The most recent Negative List issued in February 2021 states that it is not applicable to "indirect investments" or "portfolio investments made on a domestic capital market". The view of the Indonesian Capital Investment Coordinating Board (Badan Koordinasi Penanaman Modal or BKPM, now has just very recently converted into the Ministry of Investment), which is the authority responsible for reviewing and accepting direct foreign investment applications (outside of the financial sector) and granting approval, is that "indirect investments" or "portfolio investments made on a domestic capital market" are those that do not pass "control" in the listed company to the acquirer. This does not specifically address the uncertainty and still leaves open the possibility that controlling investments made into listed companies may be subject to the Negative List. Despite some follow-up regulations from the BKPM, the issue is not completely closed and ideally, a formal clarification from both OJK and the BKPM would put this issue to rest.

On the whole, the IDX continues to welcome foreign investors participating in the Indonesian stock market. It is generally believed that approximately 70% of market transactions on the IDX involve one or more foreign individual investors or institutions.

§ ID:6 Going public in Indonesia

Pursuant to Article 70 of the Capital Market Law 1995, a public offering of securities can only be made by an issuer, pursuant to an effective Registration Statement submitted to Bapepam. Exemptions from registration are provided for:

(i) an offer of securities taking the form of debt with a maturity date not more than one year after issuance;

(ii) the issuance of time deposit certificates;

(iii) the issuance of insurance policies;

(iv) the offer of securities issued and guaranteed by the Indonesian Government; or

(v) the offer of other securities stipulated by Bapepam.

Article 1(15) of the Capital Market Law 1995 defines a "public offering" as "an offering of securities by an issuer for the purpose of selling Securities to the public in accordance with the procedure stipulated under the Capital Market Law 1995 and its implementing regulations".

The enactment to Article 1(15) (which is the officially-sanctioned explanation of the law published in conjunction with that law) states that a public offering covers an offering of securities by an issuer that is made:

(i) in the territory of the Republic of Indonesia; or

(ii) to Indonesian citizens, and which:

(i) is made by using mass media;[1] or

(ii) is offered to more than 100 parties[2]; or

(iii) is sold to more than 50 parties, within 12 months and of a value of at least Rp. 1,000,000,000.

An offering of securities in the territory of the Republic of Indonesia includes an offering of Securities by a domestic or a foreign Issuer, to either Indonesian or foreign investors, where the offering is made in the territory of the Republic of Indonesia (and these must comply with the Disclosure Principle).[3]

The public offering of foreign securities can only occur by way of issuing Indonesian Depository Receipts[4] in accordance with the procedure specifically prescribed by Bapepam for offering Indonesian Depository Receipts. Indonesian Depository Receipts are Indonesian based securities which give holders equivalent rights to the underlying foreign securities that are collectively deposited in a Custodian Bank which has been approved by Bapepam.

The Indonesian Stock Exchange published a decision effective 1 November 2014 which outlined a set of simplified rules to attract mining (mineral and coal) companies to list on the exchange. The rules cover mining companies that are not in production, are in production but sales have not commenced or, have reached sales stage but have not had the opportunity to raise (substantive) capital. The rules cover both mining companies and mining company holding companies (provided the holding company receives more than 50% of its revenue from the mining operations).

[1]"Mass media" means newspapers, magazines, films, television, radio and other electronic media, as well as letters, brochures and other printed material distributed to more than 100 parties.

[2]Party(ies) is defined in the Capital Market Law as an individual, company, joint business, association, or organized group. The parties to whom securities are offered need not all be Indonesian residents or Indonesian citizens residing outside the Republic of Indonesia, for the provisions of the Capital Market Law to apply.

[3]Disclosure Principle is defined in the Capital Market Law as the general guideline which requires an issuer (being a Person who makes a public offering) and other Parties subject to the Capital Market Law, to disclose to the public within a certain time all material information with respect to their business or securities, which information may influence the decision of investors in those securities and/or the price of such securities.

§ ID:7 Going public in Indonesia—Definition of securities

"Securities" is defined by Article 1(5) of the Capital Market Law 1995 to mean promissory notes, commercial paper, shares, bonds, debentures, participation units in collective investment contracts, futures contracts related to securities and any derivatives of securities. Derivatives of securities are securities taking the form of debt or equity, such as options and warrants.

§ ID:8 Going public in Indonesia—Prospectus

Article 71 of the Capital Market Law 1995 provides that no party may offer or sell securities in a public offering unless the buyers or offerees state in the securities order forms that they have received or have had an opportunity to read the prospectus related to the securities offered prior to or at the time of placing their orders.

The underwriters for a public offering are appointed by the issuer (Article 72(1) Capital Market Law 1995). If there is more than one underwriter, the underwriters are responsible either jointly or severally for the conduct of the public offering.

Both the underwriter and the issuer are responsible for the truth and accuracy of the Registration Statement submitted to Bapepam. A draft of the prospectus must be attached to the Registration Statement when filing.

§ ID:9 Going public in Indonesia—Registration Statement

A Registration Statement becomes effective on the 45th day after receipt of a completed Registration Statement by Bapepam, or earlier if declared effective by Bapepam (Article 74(1) Capital Market Law 1995). During the 45-day period, Bapepam may ask for amendments and additional information from the issuer or public company.[1]

§ ID:10 Going public in Indonesia—Full disclosure

Bapepam must consider the adequacy, objectivity, comprehensiveness and clarity of the Registration Statement to ensure that the Registration Statement fulfills the basic principle of full disclosure (Article 75(1) Capital Market Law 1995). However, Bapepam does not evaluate the advantages and weaknesses of any particular Securities.

[Section ID:9]

[1]The terms "Issuer" and "Public Company" are used here to distinguish an issuer of securities in an initial public offering (Issuer) from an existing listed company that offers additional securities ("Public Company").

A draft of the prospectus must be attached when the Registration Statement is filed. The prospectus must not contain false information on any material fact, or fail to publish truthful information on any material fact, the disclosure of which is required to prevent the prospectus being misleading (Article 78(1) Capital Market Law 1995).

In the prospectus, all parties are prohibited from declaring, either directly or indirectly, that Bapepam has approved, permitted or validated the securities being offered, or that Bapepam has examined the advantages or weaknesses of such securities (Article 78(2) Capital Market Law 1995).

§ ID:11 Going public in Indonesia—Liability for false statements on a registration statement

The issuer or public company must also make an announcement in the mass media concerning the public offering and should not publish false information or fail to publish information on any material fact required to prevent the information in such announcement being misleading (Article 79 Capital Market Law 1995).

If a Registration Statement for a public offering contains false information about material facts or fails to state information on material facts that makes the Registration Statement misleading, then:

(i) all parties who sign the Registration Statement;

(ii) all directors and commissioners of the issuer at the time the Registration Statement becomes effective;

(iii) the underwriters; and

(iv) capital markets supporting professionals (such as auditors and legal consultants) or other parties who provide opinions or information published in the Registration Statement with their consent, are either jointly or severally liable for losses incurred as a consequence of such actions (Article 80(1) Capital Market Law 1995).

§ ID:12 Going public in Indonesia—Liability of other professionals

The supporting professionals (such as auditors and legal consultants) are liable for opinions or information rendered by them. However, if the underwriters or supporting professionals can prove that they have acted professionally and have taken sufficient steps to ensure that:

(i) the statement or information published in the Registration Statement is true; and

(ii) there were no material facts to their knowledge that were omitted and which should have been included in the Registration Statement to prevent it from being misleading; then they will not be liable for errors made in the Registration Statement (Article 80(3) Capital Market Law 1995).

All parties who offer or sell securities using a prospectus or other means, either written or orally, which contain false information on material facts or which fail to disclose information on material facts when such parties are aware or should have been aware of such matters, shall be liable for losses incurred as a consequence of such actions (Article 81(1) Capital Market Law 1995). However, buyers of securities who are aware that such information is false and misleading before purchasing such securities but who still purchase the securities cannot file claims for losses incurred as a result of such securities transactions (Article 81(2) Capital Market Law 1995).

§ ID:13 Rights issues

Pre-emptive rights are rights which are inseparable from the shares and make it possible for existing shareholders to purchase new securities (including shares and securities which can be converted into shares and warrants) before they are offered to other parties ("Rights"). These Rights can be transferred (OJK Regulation No. 32/POJK.04/2015 dated 22 December 2015 as amended by OJK Regulation No. 14 /POJK.04/2019, promulgated in Jakarta on April 30, 2019 on Increase of Capital of Public Companies by Providing Pre-emptive Rights ("OJK Regulation No. 14/2019").

If a company has already conducted a public offering of shares or if a public company intends to increase its equity capital, including through the issuance of warrants or convertible securities, each of the shareholders must be given Rights on the new securities in proportion to the percentage of their ownership in each type of share. The company must then convene a general meeting of shareholders to consider and approve the concerned offering plan. Currently, the provisions concerning Rights are stipulated under OJK Regulation No. 14/2019.

§ ID:14 Rights issues—Affiliated transactions and conflicts of interest

OJK Regulation No. 42/POJK.04/2020 dated 20 April 2020 on Affiliated Transaction and Conflict of Interest Transaction requires an Issuer or Public to:

(a) have an adequate procedure (e.g. a procedure that compares the terms and conditions of a transaction between Affiliated parties with a transaction conducted between non-Affiliated parties) to ensure that Affiliated Transaction are conducted in accordance with generally accepted business practices (defined by PJK as 'a transaction conducted by complying with the principle of fairness transaction (i.e. the arm's length principle)) (the "Affiliated Transaction Procedure") and Public Company must keep the documents related to the execution of this Affiliated Transaction Procedure. The execution of an Affiliated Transaction will require the Public Company to (i) engage an appraiser registered with OJK ("Appraiser") to determine the fair value of the Affiliated Transaction or the fairness of the Affiliated Transaction and (ii) conduct a public information disclosure and submit a report on the Affiliated Transaction to OJK (attaching the Appraiser's report, evidence of the public information disclosure and other relevant supporting documents) within two business days from the date of the Affiliated Transaction, or at the date of announcement of the Public Company's General Meeting of Shareholders ("GMS"), if the Affiliated Transaction is required to be approved by the GMS. Notable exceptions include transactions with value not exceeding (a) 0.5% of the Public Company's paid-up capital or (b) Rp5,000,000,000 (whichever is less) or a transaction between (i) the Public Company and a Controlled Company whose paid-up capital is owned at least 99% by the Public Company, or (ii) Controlled Companies whereas the paid-up capital of both Controlled Companies are owned at least 99% by the same Public Company, or (iii) a Controlled Company and a company whose paid-up capital is owned at least 99% by the said Controlled Company.

§ ID:17 Rights issues—Tender offers, mergers or consolidations, acquisitions

Any party which makes a tender offer to purchase securities of issuers or public companies must comply with the disclosure and reporting rules stipulated by Bapepam in OJK Regulation No. 54 /POJK.04/ 2015 on Voluntary Tender Offer, which was promulgated on 29 December 2015.

Additionally, it requires parties that end up owning more than 80% of the listed company post takeover must sell their excess shares within two years to ensure that at least 20% of the shares are publicly owned.

Such procedures must also comply with other relevant laws and regulations relating to mergers, consolidations and acquisitions, including the provisions on disclosure, fairness and reporting contained in the Company Law 2007 (Undang-Undang Perseroan Terbatas, Law No. 40 of 2007).

§ ID:18 Full disclosure requirements

The Government is aware that in order to attract investors, especially foreign investors, to invest through stock exchanges in Indonesia, the transparency of public companies and the full disclosure of information on public companies are critically important factors. In preparing the Capital Market Law 1995 and its implementing regulations, the Government gave special attention to this matter.

Chapter X of the Capital Market Law 1995 is devoted to reporting requirements and disclosure of information. Stock exchanges, clearing and underwriting institutions, depository and settlement institutions, investment funds, securities companies, investment advisors, securities administration bureaus, custodian banks, trust agents, issuers, public companies and other parties having obtained their licenses, approvals or registrations from Bapepam, are required to submit regular reports to Bapepam. This requirement is further implemented by various Bapepam regulations issued pursuant to specific authority granted to Bapepam under the Capital Market Law 1995.

Issuers with effective Registration Statements or public companies are required to submit periodical reports to Bapepam, the IDX and announce such reports to the public. They are also required to submit reports to Bapepam, the IDX and announce to the public material events which may potentially impact their securities prices not later that the second working day after such events occur.

The requirement to submit a report on material events is further regulated by OJK Regulation 31/POJK.04/2015 concerning Disclosure of Information or Material Facts by Emitents or Public Companies, issued on 16 December 2015. The following is a list of material events which are deemed by this regulation to affect securities prices or decisions of investors:

(a) a merger, purchase of shares, consolidation, or formation of joint ventures;

(b) submission of an offer for the purchase of securities of another company;

(c) purchase or sell shares of company with material value;
(d) a share split or merger of share;

(aa) termination or closing of some or all of the business segments;
(ab) a material effect on an Issuer or a Public Company due to a force majeure event;
(ac) Other Material Information or Facts.

Other than the above reporting requirements, all parties who own at least five percent of the shares of an issuer or a public company shall be required to report their ownership of such company's shares and any change in such ownership to Bapepam.

The Decision of the Board of Directors of the Jakarta Stock Exchange concerning Rule I-E on the Obligation of Information Submission dated 29 January 2021 mandates that every material event, information or fact related to the public company and/or its subsidiary/holding company (whose financial statements are consolidated with the listed company) that might influence the price of the company's securities and/or an investor's decision must be disclosed to the Exchange as soon as possible. This reporting includes but is not limited to any incidental reporting under OJK Regulation No. 31 /POJK.04/2015 concerning Disclosure of Material Information or Facts by Issuers or Public Companies and several other events.

There are also regulations governing the standard of disclosure relating to financial statements. In particular, OJK Regulation No. 75 /POJK.04/2017 issued on 21 December 2017 imposes liability upon directors for the financial statements of an issuer or a public company if they are found to be incorrect or misleading.

§ ID:19 Insider trading

Article 95 of the Capital Market Law 1995 prohibits an insider of an issuer or a public company from purchasing or selling securities of the issuer or public company concerned or another company which is engaged in transactions with the issuer or public company concerned. The explanatory memorandum to Article 95 clarifies the meaning of "insider" to mean the following persons:

(i) a commissioner, director, or employee of an issuer or a public company;

(ii) a majority shareholder of an issuer or a public company;

(iii) an individual, who, because of his/her position or profession or because of his/her business relationship with the issuer or public company, may obtain inside information; or

(iv) any party who within the last six months has ceased being a person referred to in paragraphs (i) to (iii) above.

Inside information is material information possessed by an insider which is not yet available to the public.

Article 96 of the Capital Market Law 1995 goes further and prohibits an insider from influencing a third party to purchase or sell securities himself or to provide any inside information to any other party to use such information to purchase or sell securities.

OJK Regulation No. 78 /POJK.04/2017, issued on 21 December 2017, however, provides for certain types of transactions for which insiders are not prohibited. For example, this regulation states that a securities transaction is not prohibited among insiders of the same issuer or public company if the insiders have the same inside information and the transaction is conducted outside a stock exchange.

In addition, an insider of an issuer or a public company may also undertake a securities transaction with non-insiders for securities of the issuer or the public company or of other companies which conduct transactions with such issuer or public company as long as this is undertaken outside a stock exchange and subject to the condition that:

a. the insider has previously given all inside information to the parties who are not insiders;

b. the parties who are not insiders do not use such inside information apart from for conducting the securities transaction with such insider;

c. the parties who are not insiders provide a written statement to the insider who gave them such information, stating that they will keep the information received confidential and will not use such information for any purpose other than conducting the securities transaction with the insider; and

d. apart from conducting the securities transaction with the insider who gave them the inside information, the parties who are not insiders do not conduct any other securities transaction involving the issuer or public company concerned or another company which conducts transactions with the issuer or public company concerned within a period of 6 (six) months from the date the information was obtained.

A violation of this OJK regulation on the permitted use of inside information provides for imprisonment for a maximum of ten years and a maximum fine of Rp.15 billion.

§ ID:20 Taxation of securities transactions—Taxation of shares

The taxation on the sale of listed shares can be summarized briefly as follows:

[2]The seller can apply for a refund of this tax if the treaty supports tax exemption. This withholding tax is final in nature and does not apply to resident banks and approved pension funds holding such funds.

§ ID:22 Sanctions

The Capital Market Law 1995 provides administrative sanctions and penal sanctions for violations of its provisions and implementing regulations. The scope of parties who may be subject to sanctions is wide. It includes not only issuers, public companies, their officers and insiders, but also a host of professionals involved in capital market activity that are licensed, approved or registered by Bapepam.

Administrative sanctions may take any of the following forms:

(i) written admonitions;

(ii) fines;

(iii) restrictions on business activities;

(iv) freezing of business activities;

[4]Based on Article 17(2)(c) of the Income Tax Law.

[5]Based on Article 4(3)(f) of the Income Tax Law.

[6]Based on Article 23(1a.1) of the Income Tax Law.

[7]Treaty eligibility requires the completion of a Certificate of Domicile (COD) and questionnaire.

[8]Based on Article 26(1a) of the Income Tax Law.

(v) revocation of business licenses;

(vi) cancellation of approvals; and

(vii) cancellation of registration.

These administrative sanctions are further regulated by Government Regulation No. 45 of 1995 Concerning the Implementation of Business Activities in Capital Markets and OJK Regulation No. 3/POJK.04/2021 dated 22 February 2021 on the Implementation of Activities in the Capital Market Sector ("POJK 3/2021").

As for penal sanctions, the Capital Market Law 1995 imposes imprisonment and fines for specific violations of its provisions and implementing regulations. For example, any party which undertakes activity in the capital market without the required licenses, approvals or registrations is subject to imprisonment for a maximum of five years and a maximum fine of Rp. 5 billion. As mentioned earlier, insider trading violations are punishable by up to ten years imprisonment and a sanction of up to Rp. 15 billion. The OJK has recently issued regulations pertaining to the obligation to pay administrative sanctions in form of fines to OJK for any violation of regulations in the financial services sector (including collection, payment and objection procedures).

§ ID:23 Investor Protection Fund

The OJK has legislated the establishment of an Investor Protection Fund for the purpose of providing compensation for the loss of investors' assets (cash and securities) deposited at custodian banks and/or securities brokers (except in the event such loss is due to the mistake by the investors, or in the case where investors experiencing the loss are the controllers of the custodian banks and/or securities brokers (or affiliates of such custodian banks and/or securities brokers)) due to (a) the custodian and/or the securities brokers not having the ability to refund the assets to the investor, or (b) the custodian bank and/or the securities brokers being incapable of continuing their business activities and have their licenses revoked by OJK. Investor protection fund is governed under OJK Regulation No. 49/POJK.04/2016 dated 2 December 2016. The Investor Protection Fund is managed by a corporation licensed by OJK and owned by the IDX, the Indonesia Securities Clearing and Settlement Corporation, the Indonesia Central Securities Depository and other legal entities in financial sector or any other institutions complying with the requirements from the OJK.

§ ID:24 Electronic filing of reports

Furthering the technological improvements in Indonesia's capital markets systems, OJK has set up a specific internet portal for listed companies to submit their various reports and disclosures. Pursuant to OJK Regulation No. 7 /POJK.04/2018 dated 25 April 2018, per 25

October 2018, listed companies must submit reports and disclosures electronically via the said internet portal. OJK has further stipulated that as per 25 October 2018, OJK no longer accepts reports submitted manually. OJK shall impose administrative sanction for any party who did not submit reports and disclosures electronically via the said internet portal.

§ ID:25 OJK levy

The OJK Law mandates that financial services companies and institutions pay a levy to OJK to partially finance OJK operations. It is important to note that the OJK Law specifically stipulates OJK to, despite being partially financed by the financial services companies and institutions, maintain its independence as the financial services regulator. New regulations have been introduced to set out the amount of levies required to be paid by each type of financial services companies and institutions, the method of collection and payment and also the method for applying for reduction of such levies.

§ ID:26 Alternative dispute resolution in the financial services sector

New regulations have been introduced to specifically govern the manner and process for out of court settlement of disputes in the financial services sector by way of engaging OJK approved Dispute Settlement Resolutions Institutions.

§ ID:27 Consumer protection regulations

The OJK has introduced consumer protection regulations to focus on (a) transparency, (b) fair treatment of consumers, (c) reliability, (d) confidentiality, and (e) handling complaints and resolving disputes efficiently.

A Financial Services Provider (including securities companies) must provide accurate, honest, clear and non-misleading information regarding its (i) products/services, (ii) acceptance, suspension or refusal to provide financial products or services to consumers based on application therefor, (iii) costs and fees that must be borne by consumers related to offered financial products and services, and (iv) amendments to benefits, costs, risks, or terms and conditions of its financial products and services.

Financial Services Providers are obliged to provide consumers with concise written information on the benefits, costs, risks, and terms and conditions of products and services offered (including any changes in relation to the products or service) which are accessible by consumers. Further, Financial Service Providers are also required to conduct consumer education to enhance community knowledge and awareness of financial products and services by organizing financial literacy events which must be incorporated into the Financial Service Provider's annual work plan and must be periodically reported to OJK.

Further, these regulations also provide that agreements between Financial Service Providers and consumers must be made based on fair, reasonable and just principles. If the Financial Service Providers use a standardized contract (i.e. a non-negotiable contract), then certain terms are prohibited from being incorporated:

- transfer of the Financial Services Provider's responsibilities onto consumers;
- limiting rights of consumers to refunds;
- the granting of a power of attorney to the Financial Services Provider to act unilaterally over collateral, unless permitted under prevailing laws and regulations;
- imposing a burden of proof on consumers in the event that the Financial Service Provider denies responsibility for the loss of a benefit from any purchased product or service;
- Financial Service Providers being granted rights to reduce the benefit of financial products or services or diminish the consumer's assets that are the object of the financial product or service agreement;
- binding consumers to future amendments or revisions to terms and conditions that are decided unilaterally by the Financial Service Provider during the term of the provision of the financial products or services; and
- having consumers grant a power of attorney to the Financial Services Provider to encumber their financial products or services purchased on an installment basis.

§ ID:28 New Developments

Cryptocurrency and initial coin offerings (ICOs) are totally banned in Indonesia. Bank Indonesia (Indonesia's central bank – "BI") and the OJK (the Financial Services regulator) have jointly affirmed that based on the prevailing regulations, the Rupiah is the only valid currency in Indonesia, and as such cryptocurrencies like bitcoins are not recognized as currency in Indonesia, and ICOs are a banned activity in Indonesia. However, despite this affirmation from BI and the OJK, Bappebti (the Commodities Futures Trading Supervisory Agency, an agency under the Ministry of Trade of Indonesia tasked to supervise Commodities and Futures trading in Indonesia) in early June 2018 issued a press statement declaring that cryptocurrency is now included as one of the commodities eligible to be traded in Indonesia's futures and commodities exchanges. Bappebti (and later, the Ministry of Trade) further issued regulations in February 2019 that affirmed its position that whilst it is not a legal currency in Indonesia, cryptocurrency assets deemed as commodities can be subject to futures trading.

Fintech has grown very rapidly in Indonesia, in particular as regards peer to peer lending, equity crowdfunding and payment system providers. From a seemingly non- existent business at the end of 2015, fintech businesses demonstrated phenomenal growth by the end of 2017 and continues its upward trajectory up to early 2020. As of August 5, 2020, the total number of registered and licensed fintech operators stands at 158 companies.[1] As of August 14, 2020, the total amount of fintech peer-to-peer lending or fintech lending operators registered and licensed at OJK numbers 157 companies.[2] The OJK supervises P2PL, equity crowdfunding, and insurance technology while BI supervises fintech companies dealing in payment system applications. In 2019, there are 58 fintech companies dealing in payment system applications registered with BI.[3]

§ ID:29 Going private

POJK 3/2021 stipulates new provisions regarding going private. In POJK 3/2021, OJK stipulates three conditions where a public company can go private: voluntarily, based on an order from OJK, or based on an order from IDX.

In the event whereby going private is conducted on a voluntarily basis, the public company would need to: (a) obtain approval from its independent shareholders, (b) buyback all shares owned by its public shareholders until the number of shareholders is less than 50 (or any other number determined by OJK), except if there is a party who undertakes to buy all shares owned by the public shareholders, (c) announce the go private plan along with the announcement of GMS to approve such plan, and (d) submit a request for the revocation of the effective registration statement to the OJK.

In the event going private is ordered by OJK, the public company would need to: (a) obtain the approval of a GMS, (b) disclose all necessary information to the public and OJK within two business days upon receipt of the OJK's go-private instruction, (c) buy back the shares of public shareholders so that the number of shareholders of the company amounts to less than 50 following the buyback, or such other figure as may be determined by OJK, (d) the public listed company fulfills its outstanding obligations (if any) to the OJK, IDX, and depository and settlement institution (Lembaga Penyimpanan dan Penyelesaian—"LPP"), and (e) apply for approval to the Minister of Law and Human Rights so as to be certified as a private company.

In the event whereby going private is ordered by IDX: (a) the public company experiences a condition or event that has a significant negative effect on the sustainability of the business of the public company,

§ ID:30 Conclusion

There have been significant changes to Indonesia's capital markets framework since the landmark privatization of the JSX in the early 1990s. Among the more turbulent events during this period was the 1997 Asian financial crisis which affected Indonesia for several years. The merger in 2007 of the SSX and JSX to create the IDX was a major milestone in Indonesia's capital markets history, as well as 31 December 2012 when the OJK took over Bapepam's jurisdiction of the capital markets. Despite the recent ructions in global financial markets Indonesia's capital market continues to grow (including the potential for growth in smaller commodities type exchanges for palm oil futures and tin) whilst trading conditions and networks have continued to modernize. Indonesia's capital markets are not, however, given the volume of foreign capital invested in them, immune to future global financial and capital market shocks.

There remain, however, various regulatory grey areas and the need for improved regulatory oversight. The regulatory framework has improved significantly in recent years and the OJK has been busy in its short history in rolling out several key regulations to the industry which apply greater compliance and responsibilities on securities companies.

[1]National development reflects a pursuit of continuous improvement in the prosperity and well-being of Indonesian citizens, in ways benefitting the lives of men and women with justice and equality, and promoting a progressive, democratic nation founded on Pancasila and the 1945 Constitution. This is in accordance with the Great National Guiding Principles that set the formation of independent and progressive qualities in the Indonesian people in a climate of peace and prosperity, as a goal for the Second Long-Term Development Plan. This goal includes the preservation of fundamental traditions, based on Pancasila, and the creation of a balanced lifestyle with harmonious relations among men, and between men and the community, nature, and Almighty God. In the field of economics, one objective of the Second Long-Term Development Plan is building a free, secure economy, with reasonably fast growth, more evenly distributed wealth, and an environment of national stability. To reach these goals, laws are needed to stimulate, facilitate and control economic development.

Necessary legislation for economic development includes regulation of the Capital Market. Until now, this has been Law 15 of 1952 entitled "The Emergency Law on the Securities Exchange", included in the Statues of 1951 and 1952 (Books 79 and 67, respectively). With the promulgation of this new "Law on the Capital Market", it is expected that the Capital Market will have a greater role in development, so that national economic objectives may be achieved.

The purpose of the Capital Market is to support national development by enhancing public welfare through economic growth and societal stability, while fostering a more equitable distribution of wealth. To reach this objective, the Capital Market plays a strategic role by financing businesses, both large and small. At the same time, the Capital Market provides the public with investment opportunities, including products for small and medium investors.

Exchanges[2] and Enabling Laws Nos. 15 and 67 of 1952 are no longer adequate for the current situation;

e) that based on these considerations, it is necessary to promulgate a Law on Capital Markets;

IN VIEW OF:

1. Article 5 item (1), Article 20 item (1), and Article 33 of the 1945 Constitution;

2. The Limited Liability Company Law No. 1 of 1995 (Statute Book No. 13 for 1995 and its Supplement No. 3587)

WITH THE APPROVAL OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE REPUBLIC OF INDONESIA HAS DECIDED TO ENACT:

A LAW ON THE CAPITAL MARKET

In view of the rapid development of the economy and the globalization of business, the time is propitious for a new "Law on the Capital Market", based on Pancasila and the 1945 Constitution.

This new Law requires Companies making Public Offerings, as well those that qualify as Public Companies, to make public all information that is material regarding their finances, management, operations, and other business activities. It is essential that the public have access to this information when making investment decisions. The Law also requires Persons making Public Offerings and Public Companies to comply with disclosure requirements when their securities are traded in the secondary market. Violation of such provisions by Persons making a Public Offering and the professionals involved, makes such persons liable to the public for losses that are due to inadequate disclosure. When the disclosure is fraudulent, violators are subject to criminal sanctions. Professionals involved in a Public Offering, such as Underwriters, Accountants, Legal Consultants, Notaries, Appraisers, and others, are required to fulfill certain obligations, and are subject to administrative and criminal sanctions for violations.

The Law also covers securities trading in the secondary market. Securities Exchanges, Clearing and Guarantee Institutions, and the Central Securities Depository have the duty to ensure that securities trading is conducted in an orderly, fair, and efficient manner.

To further ensure that the Capital Market is conducted in an orderly and fair manner, and that public investors are protected from harmful and illegal practices, a Capital Market Supervisory Agency is authorized to administer and enforce the Law. Paragraph 2. Purpose and Ownership

Article 7

Paragraph 3. Securities Exchange Rules and Inspection Units

1. the business license;
2. provisions that must be included in the articles of association;
3. the management;
4. the capital; and
5. the economic basis for establishing the Securities Exchange.

[36]Securities trading is orderly, fair and efficient when it is based on clear rules that are followed consistently. Prices should be determined by supply and demand. Trading efficiency is reflected in the speed and cost of transactions.

[37]The purpose of a Securities Exchange is to provide systems and facilities for trading Securities. With effective systems and facilities, share-holder-Members may trade Securities in an orderly, fair and efficient manner. Efficient systems and facilities also help Securities Exchanges to supervise their members effectively.

[38]In preparing an annual budget and a profit utilization plan, a Securities Exchange must endeavor to achieve Capital Market efficiency and the Exchange must observe BAPEPAM stipulations regarding, among other things:

1. Improvement of trading systems and facilities;

Article 11

[40]Securities Exchanges have self-regulatory powers. Exchange rules bind Members, Issuers of securities listed on the Exchange, and Exchange contractors such as the Clearing Guarantee Institution, the Central Securities Depository, and Custodian banks. Rule-making on clearing and settlement must be coordinated with the Clearing Guarantee Institution. "Related matters" refers to rules on Member inspections, the coordination of trading with the Clearing Guarantee Institution and the Central Securities Depository, and rules related to new kinds of operations. Fungibility refers to an attribute of Securities that relates to their interchangeability with comparable Securities with the same value, of the same Issuer.

[41]Securities Exchange rules regarding the transfer of Securities must consider general practices in the Capital Market. The "transfer of Securities" also refers to the transfer of entitlements.

[42]The principal revenues of a Securities Exchange are membership dues, transaction fees, and listing fees. Such revenues are intended to cover costs of services to Members related to Exchange trading, so that such operations are orderly, fair and efficient.

[43]The dues and fees collected by a Securities Exchange are necessary to cover operational costs and to develop the Exchange. When income is more than sufficient for operating and development needs, the Exchange may reduce its dues and fees.

[44]This Article is intended to discourage unfair competition among Securities Exchanges by allowing Securities Company to become members of more than one Exchange.

[45]To ensure that rules of a Securities Exchange comply with this Law and or its implementing regulations, such rules must be approved by BAPEPAM in order to take effect.

1. A Securities Exchange must have an inspection unit that is responsible for periodic and surprise inspections of the Exchange and its Members.[46]

2. The supervisor of the inspection unit shall report directly to the boards of directors and commissioners of the Securities Exchange, and to BAPEPAM, whenever matters are discovered that could materially affect a Member or the Exchange.[47]

[47]Reporting to the boards of directors and commissioners of the Securities Exchange and BAPEPAM is required so that they may take necessary actions to resolve problems of the Exchange and its Members.

[48]The Securities Exchanges must administer inspection unit reports properly so that they are available to BAPEPAM upon request.

[49]Clearing Guarantee Institution operations are a continuation of activities of the Securities Exchange through settlement of Exchange Transactions. Because public savings are involved, the Clearing Guarantee Institution must fulfill certain technical requirements to ensure that transactions are settled in an orderly, fair and efficient manner. In like manner, a Central Securities Depository, as the principal Custodian for safekeeping Securities, must meet certain technical requirements. Therefore, these two institutions must be licensed by BAPEPAM.

[82]Investment Fund assets include cash and such Securities as deposit certificates, commercial paper, shares, bonds, and promissory notes. The mandatory deposit of Investment Fund assets with a Custodian Bank is intended to protect the Fund's assets. For the same reason, the function of Custodian is separate from the function of Investment Manager.

[83]To avoid conflicts of interest in Investment Fund administration, the powers of the both the Investment Manager and the Custodian Bank are limited. The Investment Manager acts only as portfolio manager, while the Custodian provides safekeeping and administrative services for Fund assets. As an additional safeguard, Investment Managers may not be affiliated with the Fund's Custodian Bank.

[84]The net asset value of open-end Investment Funds must be calculated and published each trading day. The net asset value of a closed-end Investment Fund must be calculated and published at least once a week [89]An Investment Manager is liable for the Fund's losses that result from its irresponsible management or bad faith.

[90]The value of Investment Fund shares is based on the net portfolio value. As the portfolio value changes, the net asset value per share also changes. Therefore, reserve are not needed for the protection of creditors. However, reserves may be maintained to increase the size of the Fund and the value of its investment portfolio.

[95]Securities Company must meet certain licensing requirements, such as sufficient expertise and capital.

[96]An Underwriter's license also serves as a license to act as a Broker-Dealer. Securities Companies that are licensed Underwriters may carry on business as Broker-Dealers. However, a Securities Company licensed only as a Broker-Dealer may not act as an Underwriter.

[97]Persons that act as Underwriters, Broker-Dealers, or Investment Managers only with respect to the types of Securities described in this item are not required to be licensed by BAPEPAM. However, because Persons licensed by BAPEPAM may also deal in such exempt securities, and because operations in these Securities may give rise to new types of Securities that are not regulated or supervised by other government agencies, BAPEPAM has the authority to regulate such activities by virtue of this Law and its implementing regulations.

[98]Licensing requirements and procedure include such things as:

1. Requirements with respect to management, capital and expertise; and

"Employee" has the same meaning as defined in the note to Article 1 item 1 letter b. "Other Persons that work for the Company" includes non-employees authorized by the Company to perform specific duties.

[100]An Underwriter's Representative acts for the Securities Company with respect to its Securities underwriting business. A Broker-Dealer's Representative acts for the Securities Company with respect to its Securities trading business An Investment Manager's Representative acts for the Securities Company with respect to its Securities Portfolio management business.

[101]Licensing requirements and procedure include such things as:

1. Requirements with respect to experience and expertise; and
2. Procedures for submitting license applications.

[102]Since a licensed Underwriter's Representative is also a licensed Broker-Dealer's Representative, a licensed Underwriter's Representative may represent the Company in both the Underwriting and Broker-Dealer business. However, an individual licensed only as a Broker-Dealer's Representative may only represent a Securities Company with respect to its Broker-Dealer activities.

[103]The individuals in question work both for a company and its clients. In order to avoid conflicts of interest, Underwriter's Representatives, Broker-Dealer's Representatives and Investment Manager's Representatives may work for only one Securities Company.

[104]The business of an Investment Advisor is to give advice with respect to the sale or purchase of Securities, for a fee. An Investment Advisor must have certain qualifications, such as proficiency in Securities analysis. To ensure they have adequate qualifications, Investment Advisors must be licensed by BAPEPAM in order to do business in the capital market.

2. Further requirements and licensing procedures for Investment Advisors shall be stipulated in Government Regulations.[105]

Section Four Code of Conduct

Article 35

Securities Companies and Investment Advisors are prohibited from:

a) influencing or pressuring clients to act in ways contrary to their interests;[106]

b) disclosing a client's name or business, unless authorized in writing by the client or otherwise required by current law and regulations;

c) concealing material information from clients or making misrepresentations regarding their business capabilities or financial condition;[107]

d) recommending that clients buy or sell Securities, without revealing that the Securities Company or Investment Advisor has an interest in such Securities;[108] or

e) buying or holding in its name or in the name of an Affiliated Person, Securities of an oversubscribed Public Offering, with respect to which the Securities Company is the Underwriter or selling agent, until orders of Unaffiliated Persons are filled.[109]

[105]Licensing requirements and procedure include such things as:

1. Competency requirements, such as being a licensed Investment Manager's Representative; and
2. Procedures for submitting license applications.

[106]The business of Securities Companies and Investment Advisors is based on trust. In going about their business, Securities Companies and Investment Advisors must give priority to protecting the legitimate interests of their clients. They must avoid actions contrary to the interests of their clients. For example, a Securities Company salesman must not persuade a customer with limited resources to invest in high-risk Securities.

[107]In view of the trust and confidence of their clients, Securities Companies and Investment Advisors must honestly inform customers regarding their professional skills and financial situation, truthfully disclosing all information that is relevant.

[108]This prohibition is meant to avoid possible conflicts of interest, by requiring a Securities Company or Investment Advisor to disclose any interests they may have certain Securities. When Securities Companies or Investment Advisors and their clients have interests in the same Securities, the clients must be informed of such interest before making a recommendation. An interest in Securities exists when:

1. Persons, directly or indirectly, individually or jointly with others, own Securities or are en titled to dividends, interest or proceeds from the sale and or use of the Securities;
2. Persons are bound by covenants or agreements to buy Securities, or have the right to transfer or change the ownership of Securities or have preemptive subscription rights;

Article 36

Securities Companies and Investment Advisors must:[110]

a) know the background, financial situation, and investment objectives of their clients; and

b) prepare and maintain proper records of their financial condition, orders, and Transactions.

Article 37

Securities Companies must follow procedures stipulated by BAPEPAM when receiving clients' Securities and must:

a) register clients' Securities in accounts that are separate from accounts of the Securities Company;[111] and

b) maintain secure facilities for safekeeping clients' as sets, with separate records for each client.[112]

Article 38

A Broker-Dealer may not execute transactions on a Securities Exchange for his own account or for the account of Affiliated Persons, liquidity for Securities. Wide distribution of Securities among investors is important When Securities are only held by a few investors, distribution is insufficient to create liquidity. On the other hand, liquidity creates opportunities for investors to use the market to increase their wealth. To achieve this end, when there is strong demand for a Public Offering, Underwriters must give priority to unaffiliated subscribers, in stead of their own orders, or orders of their sales agents or other affiliated Persons.

[110]Because the relationship between Securities Companies and Investment Advisors and their clients is based on trust, they should know the objectives, qualifications and background of their clients. With such knowledge, the Securities Company or Investment Advisor is able adjust its services to fit the needs of each client Securities Companies and Investment Advisors must avoid situations in which the trust of their clients is abused or actions in their own interest that are against the interest of their clients. In addition, Securities Companies or Investment Advisors must maintain proper records of clients' orders, transactions and investment activities. In this way, at all times documentation is available as proof when needed by clients.

[111]Clients' Securities in safekeeping with a Securities Company are not part of the Securities Company's assets. For this reason, clients' Securities must be maintained in accounts that are segregated from accounts of the Securities Company. Since clients' Securities are not assets of the Securities Company, when the Company is bankrupt or is liquidated, clients' Securities are not part of the assets in bankruptcy or liquidation. Therefore, creditors or others with claims against the Securities Company have no rights with respect to the Securities of clients in custody with the Securities Company.

[112]Besides being obligated to segregate client's Securities from their own assets, a Securities Company must also keep separate records for each client to avoid confusing ownership of Securities. A Securities Company must also provide safe storage facilities for assets to reduce the chance that clients' securities will be lost, damaged or stolen. With separate accounts, clients of Securities Companies can readily determine the number of Securities they own and use such records as evidence until all buy and sell orders with respect to the same Securities for Unaffiliated clients have been executed.[113]

Article 39

An Underwriter must fulfill all terms of the underwriting agreement disclosed in the Registration Statement.[114]

Article 40

An Underwriter must disclose in the Prospectus[115] any Affiliation or other material relationship with the Issuer.

Article 41

A Broker-Dealer that is the Investment Manager of an Investment Fund, or a Broker-Dealer that is Affiliated with a Fund's Investment Manager,

[113]A Broker-Dealer may not purchase Securities for his own account or for the account of an affiliated Person, when there is an open purchase order with better terms from a non-affiliated Person with respect to the same Securities. However, a Broker-Dealer may purchase Securities for his own account or for the account of an affiliated Person on less favorable terms than orders of non-affiliated Persons. A Broker-Dealer may not sell Securities for his own account or for the account of an affiliated Person, when there is an open selling order on more favorable terms from a non-affiliated Person with respect to the same Securities. A Broker-Dealer may sell Securities for his own account or for the account of an affiliated Person on less favorable terms than orders of non-affiliated Persons. For example, if an non-affiliated Person gives an order to buy shares of PT X for Rp 10,000.00, the Broker-Dealer may purchase the same shares for his own account or for the account of an affiliated per son for more than Rp 10,000.00. When a non-affiliated Person gives an order to sell shares of PT X for Rp 10,000.00, the Broker-Dealer may sell the same type of shares for his own account or for the account of an affiliated Person for less than Rp 10,000.00.

[114]The agreement between the Underwriter and the Issuer with respect to a Public Offering must be disclosed in the Prospectus and the parties are required to comply with its terms. An Underwriting contract may be on a full commitment or best efforts basis. Under a full commitment contract, Underwriters must purchase unsold Securities. Under a best efforts contract, Underwriters must do their best to sell the Securities, but are not obliged to purchase Securities that are not sold.

[115]Issuers can issue Securities without using an Underwriter. In such cases, the Issuer determines the price. Underwriters may assist Issuers in marketing or may provide Issuers with assurances that they will receive the expected proceeds from the sale. In either case, the investor decides whether or not to purchase the Securities. Investors consider offerings in which the Underwriter is affiliated with the Issuer as similar to offerings by an Issuer acting without an Underwriter. When the Underwriter is affiliated with the Issuer, the investor is aware of possible conflicts of interest. When clearly disclosed in the Prospectus, the relationship between the Issuer and the Underwriter is not the decisive factor for investors. With disclosure, investors may evaluate the degree of independence of the Underwriter with respect to the Issuer. "Other material relationships" include such things as a business or debtor creditor relationship between an Issuer and an Underwriter or a contract to provide certain services.

may not charge commissions to the Fund that are higher than would be charged by an Unaffiliated Broker-Dealer.[116]

Article 42

An Investment Manager or an Affiliated Person may not receive any form of direct or indirect compensation that might influence that Investment Manager to buy or sell Securities for the Investment Fund.[117]

1. Only a Central Securities Depository, a Securities Company or a Commercial bank approved by BAPEPAM may carry on business as a Custodian.[118]

Paragraph 2. Securities in Custody Article 44

1. A Custodian is responsible for safekeeping an account holder's Securities and for fulfilling the conditions of the account-holder's contract with the Custodian.

2. Securities on deposit must be maintained and recorded separately.

[116]This is to safeguard the Investment Fund against excessive commissions charged by a Securities Company that is both Investment Manager and Broker-Dealer for the Fund, or by a Broker-Dealer that is affiliated with the Investment Manager.

[117]Investment Managers may not receive compensation of any type that influences their decisions to buy or sell Securities for an Investment Fund. Such decisions must be based solely on the interests of share or unit-holders of the Fund. An Investment Manager providing Broker-Dealer services may receive commissions without violating Article 41, as long as such commissions are not excessive. Other compensation related to fund management and stipulated in the investment management contract is also permitted.

[118]Safekeeping is an activity of Commercial Banks that is permitted under banking laws. Therefore, Commercial Banks do not require a license from BAPEPAM to provide safekeeping services. To act as Custodians, Commercial Banks must be approved by BAPEPAM since custody involves a wider range of services than safekeeping and relates to activities of the Central Securities Depository, Securities Companies, and Investment Funds. Neither A Central Securities Depository nor a Securities Company requires a separate license or approval to act as a Custodian, because their licenses already cover Custodial activities.

[119]Approval requirements and procedures include such things as:

1. Requirements regarding facilities;
2. Requirements with respect to expertise;
3. Qualifications for supervisors of Custodial activities; and
4. Procedures for submitting an application for approval.

3. Securities in safekeeping or posted to a Securities account with a Custodian are not part of the Custodian's assets.[120]

Article 45

Article 46

A Custodian must reimburse account-holders for losses resulting from the Custodian's mistake.[122]

Article 47

1. A Custodian or an Affiliated Person may not give out information on a client's Securities account to any Person other than:[123]

a) a Person authorized in writing by the account-holder or his heirs;

b) the police, public prosecutor or a judge with regards to criminal proceedings;

c) the Court with regards to civil proceedings on request of the disputing Persons;

d) tax officials for tax purposes;

e) BAPEPAM, a Securities Exchange, a Clearing Guarantee Institution, an Issuer, a Securities Administration Agency or another Custodian in the execution of their respective functions; or [120]Because Securities held in Securities accounts are not property of the Custodian, such Securities cannot be taken or seized by the creditors of the Custodian. When a Custodian is bankrupt, the Securities deposited with the Custodian are excluded from the bankruptcy assets and must be returned to the account-holders.

[121]"Written instruction" includes a signed letter or any other type of instruction authorized in the con tract between the Custodian and the account-holder.

[122]Since Securities held by a Custodian in a Securities account are under his administration, the account-holders must be safeguarded against losses for which the Custodian is responsible, such as

1. loss or damage to assets and related records;
2. delay in transferring assets; or
3. failure to collect income on assets, such as dividends, interest and other rights.

[123]Exceptions are necessary to make it possible to implement systems for trading Securities, including related clearing services, settlement guarantees, and custody of securities, since the institutions involved need information on Securities accounts. For such purposes, Securities Exchanges and Clearing Guarantee Institutions must have access to information on Securities accounts with Custodians, including Custodian Banks and the Central Securities Depository. In addition, Securities Administration Agencies need information on Securities accounts with Custodians, including Custodian Banks and the Central Securities Depository, in order to keep records of Security-holders and to dis tribute entitlements, such as dividends. Exceptions are also needed for BAPEPAM to carry out its supervisory function under the powers stipulated in this Law.

f) a Person serving the Custodian, including a consultant, a legal advisor and a public accountant.

2. Other than as necessary in carrying out their duties, Persons mentioned in letters a through f of item (1) may not disclose information received from a Custodian or an Affiliate concerning a client's Securities account.[124]

3. Requests for information on clients' Securities accounts referred to in letters b, c, and d of item (1) shall be submitted for approval to BAPEPAM by the Commander-in-Chief of the Police Force of the Republic of Indonesia, the Attorney General, the Chairman or official of the Supreme Court, or the Director General of Taxation, stating the name and rank of the police officer, prosecutor, judge, or tax official, and the name or number of the account-holder and the reasons and justification for the request.[125]

Section Two Securities Administration Agencies

Article 48

1. Only a Company that is licensed by BAPEPAM may carry on business as a Securities Administration Agency.

2. Further requirements and procedures for the Securities Administration Agency license referred to in item (1) shall be stipulated in Government Regulations.[126]

Article 49

1. A Securities Administration Agency may record Securities ownership in the Issuer's register of Security-holders, and may distribute entitlements on such Securities, in accordance with the written contract between the Issuer and the Securities Administration Agency;

2. The contract mentioned in item (1) must clearly indicate the rights and obligations of the Securities Administration Agency and the Issuer, as well as their duties to Security-holders.

[124]Although Persons indicated in item (1), letters a through f, are authorized to have access to information on Clients' Securities accounts with Custodian and their affiliated Persons, such information may not be passed on freely to other Persons. Information regarding Securities accounts only may be passed to others that needed it to carry out their duties. For example, a Securities Administration Agency needs information about the Securities accounts of Clients of a Central Securities Depository in order to give Issuers the names of shareholders that are entitled to participate in the General Meeting of Shareholders.

[125]The named official is the individual who is authorized to have access to information from Securities accounts by the Commander-in-Chief of the Police Force of the Republic of Indonesia, the Attorney General, or the Chairman of the Supreme Court.

[126]Licensing requirements and procedures refer to such matters as:

1. requirements concerning the availability of facilities;
2. qualifications of staff experts;
3. capital requirements; and
4. procedures for submitting an application for approval.

Section Three Trust-Agents

Article 50

1. The function of Trust-Agent may be performed by:[127]
   a) a commercial bank; and
   b) any other Person permitted by Government Regulation
2. Commercial banks or other Persons mentioned in item (1) must register with BAPEPAM before acting as a Trust Agent.[128] Further requirements and procedures for the registration of Trust-Agents shall be stipulated in Government Regulations.[129]

Article 51

1. A Trust-Agent may not be Affiliated with an Issuer, except for Government-owned Trust-Agents.[130]
2. A Trust-Agent shall represent the interests of the credit Security-holders in and out of court.[131]
3. A Trust-Agent may not have any credit relationship with an Issuer that exceed limits set by BAPEPAM as representing a possible conflict of interests between the Trust-Agent as creditor and as a representative of credit Security-holders.[132]

[127]Because debt securities acknowledge the indebtedness of one Person with respect to widely dispersed creditors, Trust-agents are needed in order to represent these creditors and manage their interests. In order that Trust-agents may represent the interests of holders of debt securities, Commercial Banks may engage in trust-agency activities since they have wide business connections. However, as the Capital Market grows, Persons other than Commercial Banks may be permitted by Government Regulation to act as Trust-agents.

[128]Trust-agency is one of the functions of Commercial Banks under the banking laws. Therefore, Commercial Banks do not require a license from BAPEPAM to act as Trust-agents. Nevertheless, in order to undertake such activities, Commercial Banks still need to register with BAPEPAM.

[129]Licensing requirements and procedure for Trust-agents include such things as:

1. Requirements with respect to expertise;
2. Capital requirements; and
3. Procedures for submitting registration applications.

[130]These requirements are intended to prevent conflicts of interest between a Trust-agent as the representative of creditors and the interests of the Trust-agent as a Person affiliated with the Debt Issuer. This is necessary so that a Trust-agent does its duty to fully protect the interests of creditors with in dependence.

[131]When signing a trust-agency contract with an Issuer, the Trust-agent agrees to represent the holders of the debt securities. Such representation becomes effective when the securities have been allocated to these creditors. In this process, the Law authorizes Trust-agents to represent debt security-holders of in court to defend their interests as creditors. A Trust-agents authority encompasses claiming the rights of debt security-holders, both in and out of court, without the need for specific powers-of-attorney from these creditors.

[132]This is to avoid conflicts of interest between a Trust-agent in its capacity as

4. The use of Trust-Agent services shall be regulated by BAPEPAM.[133]

Article 52

The terms of the trust-agency agreement between an Issuer and a Trust-Agent shall be regulated by BAPEPAM.[134]

Article 53

A Trust-Agent must reimburse credit Security-holders for losses due to its negligence in performing its duties under this Law and the implementing regulations or under the terms of the Trust-Agency agreement.[135]

Article 54

A Trust-Agent may not represent the interests of both the holders and guarantors of the same credit Securities.[136]

CHAPTER VII COLLECTIVE CUSTODY AND THE SETTLEMENT OF EXCHANGE TRANSACTIONS

Section One Settlement of Securities Exchange Transactions

Article 55

1. Settlement of Securities Exchange Transactions may occur by book-entry, physical delivery or other means stipulated in Government Regulations.[137] representative of debt security-holders and the Trust-agent as a creditor or debtor of the Issuer. This is necessary so that the Trust-agent performs its functions independently so as to fully protect the interests of debt security-holders.

[133]This item refers to the need of an Issuer of bonds or other long-term debt Securities to use Trust Agency services.

[134]BAPEPAM may stipulate that the terms of the Trust-agency agreement cover matters such as:

1. the principal, interest and other benefits to be paid by the Issuer;
2. the maturity date;
3. the guarantee (if any);
4. the paying agent; and
5. the duties and functions of the Trust-agent.

[135]This Article gives debt security-holders the right to claim compensation from a Trust-agent that, through negligence to its duties, is the cause of their loss.

[136]This Article prevents a Trust-agent from having a conflict of interest between its role as representative of the interests of debt security-holders and interests it would have as a guarantor that was bound to fulfill the Issuer's obligations in the event of default.

[137]"Book-entry settlement" refers to the fulfillment of rights and obligations arising from an Exchange Transaction, by means of debits and credits to Securities accounts with a Custodian, including electronic transfers. The transfer of rights to such

2. A Clearing Guarantee Institution must guarantee settlement of Securities Exchange Transactions.[138]

3. Procedures for guaranteeing the settlement of Securities Exchange Transactions mentioned in items (1) and (2), shall be stipulated by contracts with the Securities Exchange, the Clearing Guarantee Institution, and the Central Securities Depository.[139]

4. In guaranteeing the settlement of Securities Exchange Transactions as stipulated in item (2), a Clearing Guarantee Institution may require collateral from users of its services.

5. The contracts and collateral guarantees mentioned in items (3) and (4) shall be subject to BAPEPAM.

Section Two Collective Custody

Article 56

1. Securities in Collective Custody at a Central Securities Depository shall be recorded in the Issuer's registry of Security holders in the name of the Central Securities Depository as the representative of its accountholders.[140]

2. Securities in Collective Custody at a Custodian bank or a Securities Company and posted to a Securities account at a Central Securities Depository, shall be registered in such account in the name of the Securities occurs at the time of delivery, or at the time the Securities are debited to one Securities account and credited to another. "Physical Delivery" refers to settlement of Exchange Transactions by conveyance of Security certificates between Broker Dealers. "Other means of settlement of Exchange Transactions" refers to such methods as:

1. posting to the Issuer's registry of Security-holders miner than posting to Securities accounts at a Custodian;
2. settlements between countries or in other countries;
3. electronic settlement or settlement using new technology;
4. other means of settlement that may become necessary as are result of new laws and regulations.

[138]Because Exchange Transactions are interrelated, all trades must be settled by the parties. Since prior transactions are the basis for subsequent Transactions, the cancellation of a trade affects succeeding trades. A Clearing Guarantee Institution is necessary to guarantee settlement of Exchange contracts by assuring that the obligations of Exchange Members are met.

[139]Because the function of Securities Exchanges, Clearing Guarantee Institutions, and the Central Securities Depository are linked and inter-related, from the execution of the trade until settlement, these institutions must ensure that their activities are performed with efficiency and safety. To this end, these institutions must agree among themselves in writing with respect to such matters as procedures and scheduling for trading and settlement, methods of acquiring collateral from Exchange Members and the amount of collateral required, and transaction and settlement fees.

[140]This provision provides legal assurance that holders of accounts at a Central Securities Depository are recognized as the owners of the Securities or as Persons with rights with respect to the Securities, while their interests are represented by the Central Securities Depository in whose name the Securities are recorded in the Issuer's registry of Security-holders.

Custodian bank or Securities Company as the representative of its account holders.[141]

3. Securities in Collective Custody at a Custodian bank that are part of a Securities Portfolio under a collective investment contract and that are not deposited in Collective Custody at a Central Securities Depository, shall be recorded in the Is suer's registry of Security-holders in the name of the Custodian bank as the representative of owners of Participation Units of the collective investment contract.[142]

4. Issuers must provide either certificates or confirmations to the Central Securities Depository referred to in item (1) or to the Custodian bank referred to in item (3), as proof of registry in the Issuer's record of Security-holders.[143]

5. Central Securities Depository, Custodian banks, and Securities Companies must provide account-holders with confirmations[144] that serve as proof of registry in the Securities accounts mentioned in items (1) and (2).

Article 57

Securities In Collective Custody are interchangeable with and equivalent to other Securities of the same type and class of the same Issuer.[145]

[141]This provision provides legal assurance that account-holders at Custodian Banks and Securities Companies are either the owners or Persons with other rights with respect to Securities recorded in Securities accounts at the Central Securities Depository, even though the names of the Custodian Banks and Securities Companies are recorded on the accounts at the Central Securities Depository. In this case, Custodian Banks and Securities Companies represent the interests of their account holders.

[142]This provision provides legal assurance that all holders of Participation Units in an Investment Fund that is organized as a collective investment contract, are the owners or Persons with other rights with respect to the Securities in the Fund's portfolio. The Custodian Bank in whose name the Securities are registered on the Issuers registry of Security-holders, represents the owners. In this case, the Custodian Bank acts solely as representative of the owners of Participation Units in the Investment Fund.

[143]A Confirmation may be a written statement or any other form that indicates the number of Securities that are registered in the name of the Central Securities Depository in the Issuer's record of Security-holders, as representative of the interests of its account holders, or Securities registered in the name of a Custodian Bank that represents the interests of holders of Participation Units in an Investment Fund that is organized as a collective investment contract.

[144]This provision requires a Central Securities Depository, a Custodian Bank and a Securities Company to provide proof of registration in the form of confirmations to their account-holders.

[145]Securities in Collective Custody are deemed to be fungible, so that settlement of Securities trans actions is more efficient. In this respect, Securities are considered as having the same characteristics as money. For example, when someone withdraws money from a bank account, he cannot claim that the bank deliver money that is the same tangible currency he had previously deposited. In the same way, holders of Securities accounts cannot claim ownership of specific Securities based on certificate numbers, serial numbers or other characteristic of the Securities that had been

Article 58

1. A Custodian shall record the transfer of ownership of Securities in Collective Custody by debiting and crediting the respective Securities accounts with the number of Securities transferred.

2. On the instruction of the Central Securities Depository or Custodian bank, the Issuer must record on its books, the transfer of Securities out of Collective Custody, from the name of the Central Securities Depository or Custodian bank, to the name of the Person indicated.[146]

3. An Issuer shall refuse to record in Collective Custody, Securities that have been reported lost or destroyed, unless the Person requesting such registry can provide the Issuer with proof or a guarantee that it considers sufficient.[147]

4. An Issuer shall refuse to record in Collective Custody, Securities that have been pledged, blocked by court order, or seized as a result of a criminal investigation.[148]

Article 59

1. An account-holder has the right to withdraw funds and Securities at any time from his Securities account at a Central Securities Depository.[149]

2. Notwithstanding the stipulation of item (1), a Central Securities Depository may refuse to allow funds to be withdrawn or to transfer Securities from a Securities account, when such assets are blocked, restricted, or pledged.[150] deposited in the account Account-holders can only lay claim to a certain quantity of Securities of a specific type and class.

[146]Although the name of a Central Securities Depository or Custodian Bank is recorded in an Issuer's registry of Security-holders, an account-holder may instruct the Central Securities Depository or Custodian Bank to transfer the Securities in the Issuer's registry of Security-holders into his own name or into the name of any other Person that he indicates. A Central Securities Depository or Custodian Bank, on receiving such instructions, must instruct the Issuer to record the Securities in its registry of Security-holders, in the name of the account-holder or such other Person indicated by the account holder. Issuers, on receiving such instructions, must execute them in accordance with this item.

[147]This provision is to ensure that Securities in Collective Custody are valid, which means that they are clear from any legal defect including claims from anyone with respect to any rights to such Securities. This is necessary so that Securities in Collective Custody are truly available for trading. Securities that have been reported as lost or destroyed are considered to be defective, and therefore, cannot be included in Collective Custody. However, a Person may be able to prove that he owns the lost or destroyed Securities and that these Securities have never been transferred to anyone else. In this case, an Issuer may decide to allow the registry of such Securities in Collective Custody and to take responsibility for such registration.

[148]Securities that are pledged, foreclosed by court decision, or seized as a result of a criminal investigation, are considered invalid for trading. Therefore, this item stipulates that such Securities cannot be entered into Collective Custody.

[149]Cash and Securities in Securities accounts at a Central Securities Depository belong to the account-holders. This items affirms that account-holders have the right to withdraw such cash and Securities at any time.

[150]When a Securities account is blocked, restricted or pledged, the funds and Se-

3. The blocking of a Securities account as stipulated in item (2), may only take place when the Central Securities Depository receives a written order from BAPEPAM or a written request from the Head of the Regional Police Force, the Chairman of the High Prosecutor, or the Chairman of the High Court, with respect to civil or criminal court proceedings.

Article 60

1. Account holders that have Securities in Collective Custody are entitled to vote at the General Meeting of Security holders.[151]

2. Issuers, the Central Securities Depository, Custodian banks, and Securities Companies must promptly distribute dividends, interest, bonus shares and other ownership entitlements on an account-holder's Securities in Collective Custody.[152]

Article 61

Except for Securities in the account of an Investment Fund, Securities in Collective Custody may be loaned or pledged.[153]

Article 62

Issuers must provide for Collective Custody[154] in their Articles of Association.

curities in the ac count may not be withdrawn or transferred. Therefore, the Central Securities Depository may refuse to comply with a request to withdraw or transfer funds or Securities from such an account.

[151]Because account-holders own or have rights over the Securities in their accounts, they have intrinsic voting rights with respect to these Securities. This provision provides assurances and affirms that account-holders are entitled to attend and vote in the General Meeting of Security-holders, even though the Securities are recorded on the Issuer's registers in the name of the Central Securities Depository or a Custodian Bank. The role of the Central Securities Depository or Custodian Bank, in this case, is that of a Custodian representing the interests of account holders.

[152]The item affirms that account holders should promptly receive entitlements in the form of dividends, interest, bonus shares or other rights. This is essential to protect account holders against losses that may result from delays in collecting of such entitlements.

[153]Account-holders may loan or pledge Securities in their accounts at any time, without having to withdraw the Securities from Collective Custody. This is a requisite for safe and efficient loaning and pledging of Securities. The loan or pledge must be done by the account-holder's written instructions to the Central Securities Depository or to the Custodian Bank, specifying the number and type of Securities that are to be loaned or pledged, the name of the borrower or pledgee, and the conditions of the loan or pledge.

[154]Securities holders, especially shareholders, must clearly understand their rights with respect to Securities in Collective Custody and be able to exercise them. The Articles of Association of an Issuer must include provisions regarding Collective Custody, covering such matters as:

1. the fungibility of Securities;
2. the obligation to issue certificates or confirmations to the Central Securities Depository or to a Custodian Bank;

Article 63

Further rules on Collective Custody shall be stipulated by BAPEPAM

1. requirements with respect to expertise and basic facilities;

BAPEPAM is automatically canceled when the professional's license is revoked by the issuing authority.[162]

[163]Capital Market Supporting Professionals perform a variety of services. Moreover, some services involve ongoing, periodic duties. Services are provided to more than one client. When registration is revoked with respect to service of a specific type to a specific client, or with respect to services provided over a period for a client, BAPEPAM may investigate services of other types and given at other times, to the same or to other clients. "Other services" are services other than those that were the basis for the cancellation of registration or revocation of the professional license referred to in item (2). Investigation of such other services is essential to determine whether such services were correctly performed.

[164]Codes of ethics and professional standards represent minimum quality expectations with respect to client services, and must be adhered to by all Capital Market Supporting Professionals. However, if an item in such codes or standards is illegal, professionals must comply with the law. This is vital for investor protection.

[165]This provision is intended to ensure that Capital Market Supporting Professionals provide opinions that are professional, objective, impartial, and not influenced by clients or affiliated persons.

Section Three Accounting Standards

Article 69

1. Financial reports that are submitted to BAPEPAM must be prepared in accordance with generally accepted accounting principles.[167]

2. Notwithstanding the requirement in item (1), BAPEPAM may establish accounting rules with respect to the Capital Market.[168]

CHAPTER IX ISSUERS AND PUBLIC COMPANIES

Section One Registration Statements

Article 70

1. The only Issuers that may conduct a Public Offering are those that have submitted a Registration Statement to BAPEPAM with respect to the sale or offering of Securities to the public, and then only after such Registration Statement has become effective.[169]

2. The stipulations of item (1) are not applicable[170] to Persons that:

[166]The purpose of reporting violations within three days is to ensure that BAPEPAM is informed of such matters as soon as possible; so that it may take immediate action to limit or prevent loss to investors, when necessary. These confidential reports must be submitted to BAPEPAM in writing.

[167]"Generally accepted accounting principles" refer to Financial Accounting Standards issued by the Indonesian Institute of Accountants and other general accounting practices used in the Capital Market.

[168]When the Financial Accounting Standards referred in the note to item (1) are inadequate for the needs of the Capital Market, such as compliance with the Full Disclosure Principle, BAPEPAM may establish rulings on such matters in order to protect the public interest.

[169]Public Offerings are a method of raising funds from the public. It is necessary to protect the interests of public investors in Securities. For this reason, Persons intending to raise funds through a Public Offering are required to submit a Registration Statement to BAPEPAM. The Public Offering may only be initiated when the Registration Statement becomes effective.

[170]Exemptions with respect to item (1) are required because the Securities referred to in letters a, b, and c of this item are subject to the administration, regulation, and supervision of other agencies. The requirements of item (1) do not apply to Securities that are issued or guaranteed by the Indonesian Government, because the Government is capable of meeting all obligations with respect to such Securities. In anticipation of the issuance of other Securities, BAPEPAM may have reason to provide exemptions for such Securities from the obligations of item (1).

a) make an offering of credit Securities with a maturity of less than one year;

b) issue certificates of deposit;

c) issue insurance policies;

d) make an offering of Indonesian Government Securities or Securities guaranteed by the Indonesian Government; or

e) make an offering other types of Securities stipulated by BAPEPAM.

Article 71

No Person may sell Securities in a Public Offering, unless the purchaser or subscriber certifies on the order form that, before or at the time of subscription, he has received or has had an opportunity to read the Prospectus with respect to such Securities.[171]

Article 72

1. Managing Underwriters are appointed by Issuers.

2. When there is more than one Managing Underwriter, all are jointly and severally liable for the conduct of the Public Offering.[172]

3. Managing Underwriters and Issuers are responsible for the correctness and completeness of Registration Statements submitted to BAPEPAM.

Article 73

Every Public Company must submit a Registration Statement to BAPEPAM.[173]

Section Two Procedures for Submitting Registration Statements

Article 74

1. A Registration Statement becomes effective on the forty-fifth day after receipt in complete form, or on any earlier date on which it is declared effective by BAPEPAM.[174]

2. During the period referred to in item (1), BAPEPAM may request

[171]Investors have an opportunity to have review to the contents of a Prospectus when making their investment decisions.

[172]Joint and several liability means that when there are multiple Underwriters, investors can claim compensation from one or more of these Underwriters, when they have losses due to the negligence of such Underwriters.

[173]To protect the interests of shareholders of Public Companies, Companies that are so classified must submit a Registration Statement.

[174]This provision assures Issuers that their Registration Statement will become effective automatically on the forty-fifth day, even though BAPFPAM takes no action, as long as the Registration Statements that have been submitted are complete and meet all requirements.

amendments and additional information from the Issuer or Public Company.

3. When a Public Company or Issuer submits changes or additional information, the Registration Statement is considered to have been resubmitted as of the date such amendments or additional information are received.[175]

4. A Registration Statement does not become effective until the additional information or amendments mentioned in item (2) have been received and all BAPEPAM requirements have been met.[176]

Article 75

1. BAPEPAM shall consider the completeness, adequacy, objectivity, comprehensiveness and clarity of a Registration Statement in order to ensure that it fulfills the Disclosure Principle.

2. BAPEPAM shall not evaluate the merits and weakness of a Security.[177]

Article 76

When the Registration Statement states that Securities are to be listed on a Securities Exchange, the offering of such Securities shall be null and void if the listing requirements are not met, and the subscription moneys shall be returned to subscribers.[178]

Article 77

Further rules regarding the requirements and procedures for submit ting Registration Statements shall be made by BAPEPAM.[179]

---

[175]When BAPEPAM asks an Issuer or Public Company to amend or provide additional information with respect to a Registration Statement, the date that the Registration Statement automatically becomes effective is counted from the date that such additional information or amendment is received.

[176]It may occur that a Registration Statement submitted to BAPEPAM is incomplete and does not meet the requirements so that the date that Registration Statement become effective exceeds the initial forty-five day period. In such cases, BAPEPAM may request amendments and additional information from the Issuer or Public Company. An amended Registration Statements may be declared effective, when:

1. All amendments and additional information required by BAPEPAM have been submitted; and
2. Such amendments and additional information meet the requirements.

[177]BAPEPAM does not judge the quality of Securities offered. The decision to invest is entirely that of the investor.

[178]The intent to list Securities on a Securities Exchange is an important consideration in the investment decision. Therefore, when such intent is disclosed but not met, the Public Offering is annulled, and Issuers and Underwriters must return subscription moneys to the investors.

[179]Requirements and procedures for submitting Registration Statements include, among other things:

Section Three Prospectuses and Publications

Article 78

1. A Prospectus shall not contain false statements with respect to Material Information, and shall not omit Material Informations that would be necessary for the Prospectus to not be misleading.[180]

2. All Persons are prohibited from stating, directly or indirectly, that BAPEPAM has approved, authorized, certified or re searched the merits or weaknesses of a Security.[181]

3. Further regulation regarding Prospectuses shall be made by BAPEPAM.[182]

Article 79

1. Announcements in the mass media that relate to Public Offerings shall not contain false statements regarding Material Information and shall not omit to state Material Information that is required in order that the statements contained in such announcements are not misleading.[183]

2. Matters that must be disclosed and the contents and requirements for the announcements mentioned in item (1) shall be further regulated by BAPEPAM.[184]

1. requirements as to the type of documents that make up the Registration Statement;
2. requirements that must be fulfilled by Persons making a Public Offering; and
3. procedures for submitting Registration Statements.

[180]A Prospectus is one of the main documents in a Public Offering. For this reason, the information contained must truthfully describe the Issuer's situation and constitute a useful basis for making investment decisions. When Material Information is false, or when Material Information is not disclosed, investors may be led to make unsuitable investment decisions.

[181]This provision is intended to prevent Persons that are trying to influence the public to buy Securities, from falsely stating that BAPEPAM has approved, licensed, verified, examined, or evaluated the various aspects or advantages of such Securities.

[182]Such "further regulation" shall deal with the form and content of the Prospectus. A Prospectus shall at least contain:

1. a description of the Public Offering;
2. the purpose of the Public Offering and the projected use of the proceeds;
3. an analysis and discussion of the business and finances;
4. business risks;
5. financial data;

I. JAPANESE LEGAL SYSTEM

§ JP:1 Authority

The present Constitution of Japan (the "Constitution") was enacted in 1946 and came into force in 1947, with a view to the democratization of Japan in line with the Potsdam Proclamation of 1945, which was accepted by Japan and ended World War II. The Constitution replaced the Meiji Constitution of 1889, which was based on the constitutional monarchy. The Constitution stipulates that the emperorship rests on the doctrine of the popular will and represents only "the symbol of the State and the unity of the people"[1] and that the legislative, judicial and executive powers are vested independently in the Diet, the Supreme Court and lower courts, and the cabinet, respectively.[2]

The administrative branch, with the cabinet and the Prime Minister of Japan (hereinafter, "Prime Minister") at the top, applies laws and regulations in the first instance, by exercising its administrative power, while the courts have the ultimate authority to interpret and apply the laws. The Diet, in many cases, empowers the administrative branch to provide regulations within the framework of the laws enacted by the Diet. In addition, many of the laws enacted by the Diet are proposed by the administrative branch. The administrative branch exercises a substantial influence not only over the regulated parties but also, through the realization of its administrative policy through such regulated parties, over the people as a whole. "Administrative guidance" broadens this influence by way of voluntary compliance by the regulated parties. Within the framework of the interrelationship of the three branches of government, the administrative branch plays an important role, not only in the application of the law but also in the creation of new laws and regulations.

§ JP:2 Nature of Japanese Laws

With regard to the nature of Japanese laws, after the Meiji Restoration of 1868 many of the modern Japanese laws such as the Civil Law[1] and the Commercial Code[2] were modeled after the codified laws of continental European countries. The primary source of law in Japan is codified written law, not customary law. However, since the end of World War II, most Japanese laws have been substantially influenced by Anglo-American law. The Financial Instruments and Exchange Act (the "FIEA"), a main Japanese securities Regulation, is modeled on the securities regulations of the United States.

II. SECURITIES AND EXCHANGE ACT (SEA)

§ JP:3 Establishment of and amendment to the Securities and Exchange Act

For a few years after World War II, the Japanese people were unable to invest in securities, since there were few investors due to the dissolution of family-run conglomerates (zaibatsu) mandated by General Headquarters of Allied Forces (GHQ) and, accordingly, there was no securities exchange in Japan. However, in response to growing demands for investment in securities, the Securities and Exchange Act[1] (the "SEA"), the predecessor of the FIEA, was enacted (and around the same time tradings at the Tokyo Stock Exchange, Osaka Securities Exchange and the other stock exchanges were established under the SEA). Originally, the SEA constituted a consolidation of the Securities Act of 1933 and the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 of the United States, providing for both disclosure requirements in the primary and secondary markets and regulation of securities companies, stock exchanges and securities transactions. Additionally, it included a provision[2] prohibiting commercial banks from engaging in the securities business, similar to the provision in the Glass-Steagall Act of the United States.

Since then, Japanese securities regulations including the SEA have been amended from time to time in accordance with the increasing demand to protect investors, requests of the business community and other reasons. The following are the main amendments to the SEA.

§ JP:4 SEA Amendments between 1952 and 1955

After Japan regained its autonomy following the conclusion of the San Francisco Peace Treaty in 1951, the SEA was amended as follows:

(1) margin trading was permitted to stimulate trading by introducing speculative demand and supply;
(2) minimum capital regulations on companies that engage in the securities business (securities companies) were introduced;
(3) provisions relating to the supervision of securities companies were strengthened; and
(4) securities registration regulations were simplified.

§ JP:5 SEA Amendments in 1965

The following amendments and enactments were made due to the securities market crisis in Japan, which resulted from a long period when the stock market was sluggish:

(1) a licensing system for securities companies was introduced (previously, it had been a registration system);
(2) the supervision of securities companies was strengthened such as by the prohibition of statements as to the future performance of shares meant to induce trading, the prohibition of promises by securities companies to compensate their clients for any losses, and the establishment of disciplinary regulations for securities companies, their officers and employees; and

(3) a registration system was introduced for securities companies' sales representatives (shoken-gaimuin).

§ JP:6 SEA Amendments in 1971

Fraudulent accounting by some companies immediately before declaring bankruptcy became an important issue in Japan, which resulted in some of the following amendments to the SEA:

(1) amendment of the securities registration system such as simplifying the content of Securities Registration Statements (yukashoken-todokedesho, the "SRS") filed by companies required to make continuous disclosure that have filed annual securities reports (yukashoken-hokokusho);

(2) amendment of the continuous disclosure system such as the expansion of the events necessary to file extraordinary reports (rinji-hokokusho);

(3) strengthening of civil liabilities such as those for loss incurred as a result of any actions by issuers, and their officers, certified public accountants and underwriters for material misstatements;

(4) creation of the takeover bid (TOB) regulations; and

(5) creation of the "Law Concerning Foreign Securities Firms," which relates to foreign securities firms that engage in the securities dealing business in Japan.

§ JP:7 SEA Amendments in 1988

In 1988, the provisions relating to stock price index futures trading, which is a means of off-setting the risk of price fluctuations in the stock markets, was introduced into the SEA and, accordingly, the regulations of the securities futures markets were strengthened. In addition, insider trading regulations were introduced.

§ JP:8 SEA Amendments in 1990

Due to an increase in the occurrence of substantial amounts of stocks of listed companies being bought-up by stock speculators, the SEA was tasked with ensuring the fairness and transparency of the market. Accordingly, regulations requiring disclosure of status for those holding a large volume of shares were introduced and the takeover bid (TOB) regulations were thoroughly amended to accord with internationally accepted standards.

§ JP:9 SEA Amendments in 1991 and 1992

The provision by securities companies of substantial amounts of compensation for the loss of their certain clients and deep involvement with anti-social forces became a serious problem and, consequently, compensating clients for their loss and discretionary trading by securities companies were prohibited in 1991.

Additionally, the following amendments to the SEA were made in 1992:

(1) establishment of the Securities and Exchange Surveillance Commission to boost surveillance over violations of the securities trading regulations; and
(2) reinforcement of the functions of securities exchanges and securities dealers associations as self-regulatory organizations.

Furthermore, for the purpose of the ongoing financial deregulation and internationalization, the following changes to the SEA were made:

(3) insurance companies, banks and securities companies were allowed to enter parts of each other's respective business fields;
(4) definition of "Securities" subject to the SEA was expanded; and
(5) concepts of the "Public Offering of Securities" and the "Private Placement of Securities" in regard to the requirement to file a SRS were readjusted.[1]

§ JP:10 SEA Amendment in 1997

With the acceptance of stock option plans by the Japanese legal system such as in the Commercial Code, the takeover bid (TOB) regulations were further amended. Additionally, as a part of the means of coping with corporate scandals, such as in the case of Japanese securities companies and banks providing illegal benefits to certain corporate shareholder extortionists (sokai-ya), the penalties for illegal activities related to securities transactions were strengthened.

§ JP:11 SEA Amendment in 2000

The amendment allowed procedures for the disclosure of corporate information by the filing and publication of disclosure documents such as securities reports and SRS to be made electronically.

§ JP:12 SEA Amendment in 2003

Although, previously, only certain persons such as securities companies were permitted to deal securities, the amendment allowed persons registered as Securities Sales Intermediate Agents[1] to deal securities (this business is defined as "Securities Intermediary Service"[2]) in order to vitalize the Japanese securities market by enabling investors to invest in securities in a greater variety of ways.

§ JP:13 SEA Amendment in 2004

Investment instruments that take advantage of collective investment schemes[1] were made subject to the SEA by categorizing them as "Securities." Additionally, Japanese financial institutions were permitted to engage in the Securities Intermediary Service. Furthermore, an administrative monetary penalty (kachokin) system was introduced which imposes on a person, for example, who has conducted an offering with disclosure documents that include a material misstatement, an administrative monetary penalty calculated based on the profit resulting from the fraudulent behavior.

§ JP:14 SEA Amendment in 2005

To cope with the changing situation of the securities markets and to improve the international competiveness of the Japanese domestic market, the following amendments to the securities regulations were made:

(1) the parent company of a listed company that is required to submit its own status report unless it has filed a securities report; and

(2) the system that foreign companies may submit continuous disclosure documents in their original English language under specific conditions is introduced.

III. THE FINANCIAL INSTRUMENTS AND EXCHANGE ACT (FIEA)

§ JP:15 FIEA Amendment in 2006

Since the traditional securities regulations including the SEA were originally vertically administrated, they were re-examined with the aim of establishing a so-called "Investment Services Act" which is a regulation on dealing and management relating to a wide-range of financial instruments such as securities, futures trading and mutual funds, and the Financial Futures Trading Act, the Law Concerning Foreign Securities Firms, the Act for the Regulation, etc. of Securities Investment Advisory Business, and the Act on Regulation, etc. of Mortgage Securities Business, which regulated the dealing and management of these financial instruments, have now been repealed and their provisions integrated into the SEA. In addition, the SEA was renamed the "Financial Instruments and Exchange Act".

[Section JP:13]

[1]See Art. 2, para. 2 of the FIEA.

The FIEA is based on four concepts: (i) regulations relating to investment services, (ii) maintenance of disclosure regulations, (iii) ensuring proper management of self-regulated services by securities exchanges, and (iv) ensuring a strict response to unfair trading. The amendments based on the above concepts are mainly as follows.

§ JP:16 Disclosure Regulations

The FIEA has additionally imposed on companies required to make continuous disclosure, etc. relating to highly-liquid listed financial instruments such as shares, the obligation to implement an Internal Control Report System,[1] a Quarterly Securities Reports System,[2] and a System of Confirmation Letter by Managers.[3]

Securities which are deemed low-liquid financial instruments such as equities relating to collective investment schemes are exempted from the application of the disclosure regulations. In this regard, however, equities relating to collective investment schemes that mainly invest in Securities may now be subject to the disclosure obligation.[4] Thus, if a considerably large number of persons acquire such equities relating to such collective investment scheme, it falls under the category of a "Public Offering of Securities" or the "Secondary Distribution of Securities" and, accordingly, a person or corporation that is deemed to be the issuer of such equities is subject to the obligations pursuant to the disclosure regulations such as the filing of an SRS.[5]

§ JP:17 Business Regulation

The inclusive business regulation provisions regarding collective investment schemes were established in order to regulate collective investment schemes, and the scope of deliberative transaction to be regulated has been expanded.

Additionally, an inclusive and all-encompassing legal structure has been established by integrating (i) the securities business under the SEA and (ii) the Act Concerning Foreign Securities Firms, (iii) the investment trust commissioned business under the Investment Trust and Investment Corporation Act, and (iv) the discretionary investment management business under the Act for the Regulation, etc. of Securities Investment Advisory Business, into the "Financial Instruments Business"[1] under the FIEA. The Financial Instruments Business has been divided into the "Type I Financial Instruments Business,"[2] "Type II Financial Instruments Business,"[3] "Investment Advisory and Agency Business,"[4] and "Investment Management Business,"[5] according to the characteristics of each operator. Additionally, the requirements to engage in the Financial Investments Business, other than a Private Trading System (PTS),[6] have been integrated into a registration system (torokusei), rather than a license system. The financial institutions that are registered as Registered Financial Institutions[7] with the Prime Minister (administered by the Commissioner of Financial Services Agency) to engage in parts of the Financial Institutional Business are subject to the disciplinary regulations of the FIEA as is the Financial Instruments Business Operator.

With regard to collective investment schemes, persons who make a sale and placement of the rights relating to collective investment schemes must be registered with the Prime Minister (administrated by the Commissioner of Financial Services Agency) as a Type II Financial Instrument Business Operator, and, additionally, since the management of the fund, such as money collected for a collective investment scheme by the investment in securities or rights relating to derivative transactions falls under the Financial Instrument Business as Investment Management Business, persons who intend to conduct the activities mentioned above (including a specific purpose company, which is a vehicle for a collective investment scheme) must be registered as a Financial Instruments Business Operator. However, even in the case above, if they solicit "Qualified Institutional Investors," and less than 50 persons other than the Qualified Institutional Investors, they are exempted from the obligation of registration, provided they make a Special Business Filing.[8]

§ JP:18 Disciplinary Regulations

The disciplinary regulations of the FIEA are flexibly applied to the Financial Services Business Operators and the Registered Financial Institutions by the application of different regulations depending of whether the transaction by the Financial Services Business Operators or the Registered Financial Institutions is carried out with Profes-

§ JP:19 FIEA Amendments in 2008 and 2009

The FIEA was amended in 2008 and 2009 in order to deal with various urgent issues such as the enhancement of competitiveness of the financial and capital markets in Japan as follows:

(1) provisions relating to opening the markets for Professional Investors and diversification of ETFs were added;
(2) firewall regulations among securities companies, banks and insurance companies were eased, a management system for conflict of interest among other business fields was established and the scope of services of financial institutions such as banks was expanded;
(3) administrative monetary penalties were increased and the parameters of those subject to the administrative monetary system, etc. were expanded;
(4) regulations on credit rating agencies such as a registration system (torokusei) were introduced;
(5) Alternative Dispute Resolution (ADR) for the financial services sector was established; and
(6) the definition of "Secondary Distribution of Securities" depending upon the character of Securities and investors' attributes was readjusted so that it is in line with that of Public Offering of Securities.

(Amendments (1) to (3) and (4) to (6) were made in 2008 and 2009, respectively.)

The FIEA has been amended since the above changes were made and will continue to be amended in the future as the situation demands.

IV. SOURCES OF SECURITIES REGULATION

§ JP:20 Overview

The post-war development of Japanese securities markets and the political and economic environment have been reflected in the changes and developments in the various sources of Japanese securities regulation.

The basic sources of securities regulation are statutory provisions, as well as enabling legislation in the form of cabinet orders and ministerial ordinances and rules. Additionally, various notices, notifications and releases by the regulatory authorities have provided an interpretation of the regulations concerning specific matters and as such also constitute sources of securities regulation.

The regulatory authority exercises its administrative power through the supervision of the regulated parties, including self-regulatory organizations, and their "administrative guidance" has an important impact on the performance of the regulated parties. Self-imposed regulations made officially by the self-regulatory organizations under the respective statutes, or unofficially by securities companies, in each case under the guidance or support of the government regulatory authority, have a material impact on the securities markets.

Securities regulations found in these sources are indispensable in locating all the regulations applicable to a specific issue at a given time. A list of selected sources of Japanese securities regulations as they appear in the statutes, cabinet orders and ministerial ordinances and rules is set out below and, where appropriate, a brief discussion of their history is provided.

The FIEA and Enforcement Orders thereunder mainly provide for (a) disclosure requirements (including those relating to public offerings, tender offers and large volume holdings of shares, etc.),[1] (b) regulations on parties engaging in securities transactions, such as Financial Instruments Business Operators,[2] Financial Instruments Intermediary Service Providers,[3] Credit Rating Agencies,[4] Financial Instruments Firms Associations including the Japan Securities Dealers Association,[5] Investor Protection Funds,[6] Financial Instruments Exchanges including stock exchanges,[7] Foreign Financial Instruments Exchanges,[8] Financial Instruments Clearing Organizations,[9] Securities Finance Companies,[10] and Directed Dispute Settlement Institutions,[11] (c) regulations on (i) transactions relating to Securities by the Financial Instruments Business Operators such as securities compa-

The disclosure requirements include (a) disclosure requirements at the time of public offering (including the Public Offering of Securities and the Secondary Distribution of Securities) by filing an SRS, securities notification statements or shelf registration statements and by the use of prospectuses,[18] (b) continuous disclosure requirements (including annual securities reports, semi-annual securities reports and quarterly securities reports, extraordinary reports, internal control reports, status reports of the parent company, etc.) applicable to the issuers of publicly offered securities, the issuers of securities listed on the Financial Instruments Exchange and issuers of securities whose holders exceed certain threshold numbers,[19] (c) disclosure requirements applicable to takeover bids (TOB),[20] (d) disclosure requirements as to large holdings and bulk transfers of securities,[21] (e) special provisions for procedures relating to the use of electronic data processing systems for disclosure, and (f) disclosure requirements for Professional Investors.[22]

The regulations under the FIEA concerning disclosure requirements include:

(7) Cabinet Ordinance on Special Provisions, etc. for Procedures by Use of Electronic Data Processing System for Disclosure. (CO Ordinance No. 45, May 22, 2002).

The Cabinet Ordinances referred to above have undergone various amendments as the policy of the regulatory authority has changed.

For the purpose of the disclosure of financial statements, the FIEA requires financial statements prepared according to the regulations thereunder, together with opinions of independent certified public accountants. In this connection, the following Rules and Ordinance apply:

(1) Rules Concerning Terminology, Form and Method of Preparation of Financial Statements, etc. (MOF Ordinance No. 59, November 27, 1963),
(2) Rules Concerning Terminology, Form and Method of Preparation of Consolidated Financial Statements (MOF Ordinance No. 28, October 30, 1976),
(3) Rules Concerning Terminology, Form and Method of Preparation of Interim Financial Statements, etc. (MOF Ordinance No. 38, August 30, 1977),
(4) Rules Concerning Terminology, Form and Method of Preparation of Interim Consolidated Financial Statements (MOF Ordinance No. 24, March 30, 1999),
(5) Rules Concerning Terminology, Form and Method of Preparation of Quarterly Financial Statements, etc. (CO Ordinance No. 63, August 10, 2007),
(6) Rules Concerning Terminology, Form and Method of Preparation of Quarterly Consolidated Financial Statements (CO Ordinance No. 64, August 10, 2008), and
(7) Ministerial Ordinance Concerning Audit Certificate of Financial Statements, etc. (MOF Ordinance No. 12, March 28, 1957).

The rules listed in (1) through (7) above concentrate on the format of financial statements. The accounting principles to be applied in preparation of the financial statements of Japanese companies under the securities regulations (i.e., Japan GAAP) are set forth in the Financial Accounting Standards (kigyo-kaikei-gensoku). The Financial Accounting Standards were originally established in 1949 by the Financial Accounting System Study Committee, which was subsequently reorganized into the Financial Accounting Council of the Ministry of Finance.

For the purpose of regulating parties, such as Financial Institutional Business Operators including securities companies, foreign securities firms and investment management companies that engage in the Financial Instruments Business, the Ordinance Concerning Financial Instruments Business, etc. (PMO Ordinance No. 52, August 6, 2007) was passed.

Additionally, regulations for financial instruments transactions are included, in addition to the FIEA and Enforcement Order thereunder, in the:

(a) Ordinance Concerning Rules Relating to Transaction of Securities, etc. (PMO Ordinance No. 59, August 8, 2007), and

(b) Ordinance Concerning Transactions and their Security Deposits Set Forth in Article 162-2 of the Financial Instruments and Exchange Act (MOF Ordinance No. 75, August 27, 1948).

V. REGULATORY AUTHORITIES FOR SECURITIES REGULATIONS

§ JP:21 Generally

In addition to enforcement by the courts, securities regulations including the FIEA are, in the first instance, applied by various regulatory authorities as mentioned above.

When the SEA was enacted in 1948, the securities regulations were within the purview of the Securities and Exchange Commission created as an independent administrative commission modeled after the U.S. SEC. However, in June 1949 the Commission became an external bureau of the Ministry of Finance and by amendment to the SEA in 1952 the Commission was abolished and its function was assumed by the Minister of Finance.

By the 1993 amendment to the SEA, the Securities and Exchange Surveillance Commission (shoken-torihikito-kanshi-iinkai) was created within the Ministry of Finance. The Commission is empowered to investigate a violation of the securities regulations and, on finding reasonable grounds to suspect, is obliged to indict.

In 1998 after the jusen problems[1] surfaced, and as part of administrative reform, the Financial Supervisory Agency (kinyu kantoku cho) was established as an external bureau of the Prime Minister's Office. The Agency was charged with the duty of regulating institutions engaged in the banking, insurance and securities business in order to protect the interests of depositors, insurance customers and securities investors and to ensure fairness in securities trading. At the same time the Securities and Exchange Surveillance Commission was moved from the Ministry of Finance and placed under the supervision of the Financial Supervisory Agency. In the same year, in order to handle failures of financial institutions and financial crisis management, the Financial Reconstruction Commission (kinyu saisei iinkai) was created and the Financial Supervisory Agency was placed under this Commission.

[Section JP:21]

[1]These problems related to how to treat bad and doubtful debt, which Jusen companies (mortgage lending institutions created by Japanese banks in the early 1970s with strong encouragement from the Ministry of Finance) owned a great deal of during the bubble economy. These problems later led to the restructuring of the Ministry of Finance.

In 2000 the Financial Supervisory Agency was reorganized into the Financial Services Agency (kinyu cho) and, in 2001, the Financial Reconstruction Commission was abolished and, due to the reorganization of government ministries and agencies, the Financial Services Agency became an extra ministerial bureau of the Cabinet Office.

At present, although the Prime Minister mainly has administrative authority over the securities regulations, most of his authority has been delegated to the Commissioner of Financial Services Agency (who in turn has delegated parts of this authority, such as that relating to securities transactions, to the Securities and Exchange Surveillance Commission). Thus, the Financial Services Agency and the Securities and Exchange Surveillance Commission are the principal administrative agencies charged with the administration of securities regulations.

In concrete terms, the securities regulations are, in the main, divided among the different agencies as set out below:

(1) Information disclosure system—the Prime Minister (the Commissioner of the Financial Services Agency and the Securities and Exchange Surveillance Commission) (filing of securities registration statements, securities reports, etc.; their examination; effectiveness of registration, order to suspend effectiveness, etc.);

(2) Regulation of the Financial Instruments Business Operators—the Prime Minister (the Commissioner of the Financial Services Agency);

(3) Regulation of the Financial Instruments Exchanges and the Financial Instruments Dealers Associations—the Prime Minister (the Commissioner of the Financial Services Agency); and

(4) Regulation of the Investors Protection Funds—in the main, under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Finance.

§ JP:22 Self Regulated Organizations

The other organizations provided for in the FIEA are the Financial Instruments Exchanges[1] such as securities exchanges, and the Financial Instruments Dealers Associations.[2] There are at present six Financial Instruments Exchanges (Tokyo Stock Exchange, Osaka Securities Exchange, Nagoya Stock Exchange, Sapporo Securities Exchange, Fukuoka Stock Exchange and Tokyo AIM)[3] located in five major cities (Tokyo, Osaka, Nagoya, Sapporo and Fukuoka) in Japan.

[Section JP:22]

[1]Art. 2, para. 16 of the FIEA.

[2]Arts. 67 through 79-19 of the FIEA.

[3]As of November 2011, one company is listed on Tokyo AIM.

The Financial Instruments Dealers Associations are self-regulated organizations, of which there are three types. One type is the Authorized Financial Instruments Dealers Association[4] formed under the authority (ninka) of the Prime Minister. In 1973 the Japan Securities Dealers Association (JSDA, nihon shokengyo-kyokai) was formed through the consolidation of the ten regional securities dealers associations then existing in Japan. It was established by securities companies for the purpose of securing fair securities transactions and for the protection of investors. It is now the only Authorized Financial Instruments Dealers Association in existence. The second type is the Public Interest Corporation-Type Financial Instruments Firms Association[5] which is certified (nintei) by the Prime Minister pursuant to the FIEA (formed pursuant to the Civil Law). They include: The Financial Futures Association of Japan (kinyu-sakimono torihikigyo kyokai), the Investment Trusts Association, Japan (toshishintaku kyokai), Japanese Securities Investment Adviser Association (nihon shokentoshi-komongyo kyokai) and the Japan Commodities Fund Association (nihon shohintoshi-hanbaigyo kyokai), (which were formed for the purpose of securing fair transactions and the protection of investors in their respective fields).

Furthermore, the Financial Instrument Dealers Association includes Certified Investor Protection Organizations as the third type.[6] They are civil organizations (which can be established by those other than Financial Instruments Business Operators), other than the self-regulated institutions such as the Authorized Financial Instruments Dealers Association and the Public Interest Corporation Type Financial Instruments Firms Association above, established for the main purpose of grievance resolution and mediation to protect investors. Certification by the administrative agency is intended to enhance their reliability.

§ JP:23 Investors Protection Funds

The 1998 amendment to the SEA introduced the Investors Protection Fund.[1] In order to protect securities customers in the event of bankruptcy or insolvency of a securities company, the investors' protection fund was created under the authority (ninka) of the Prime Minister. At least 20 Financial Instruments Business Operators are members of the Investment Protection Fund. Financial Instruments Business Operators that engage in Securities Related Business must be a member of at least one Investors Protection Fund.

§ JP:24 Corporate Accounting Council

The Corporate Accounting Council under the jurisdiction of the Ministry of Finance (currently, the Financial Services Agency) was previously responsible for the investigation and deliberation of accounting principles. However, the Accounting Standards Board has been responsible for the investigation and deliberation, since it was established by the Financial Accounting Standards Foundation, which is part of the private sector, in 2001. In addition, the Japan Certified Public Accountants Institute is an important self-regulatory organization which promotes fair disclosure of financial information of corporate issuers. The Institute was originally formed in 1949 as a self-disciplinary association, and reorganized under the Certified Public Accountants Act in 1966. All certified public accountants and auditing corporations are required to be members of the Institute.

VI. DISCUSSION OF REGULATIONS REGARDING SECURITIES MATTERS

A. DEFINITIONS

§ JP:25 "Securities" defined

The purpose of the FIEA is (i) to ensure fairness in the issuance of Securities and other transactions of financial instruments, etc.; (ii) to facilitate the smooth distribution of Securities by, among other things, streamlining systems for disclosure of corporate affairs and other related matters, providing for the necessary matters relating to operators of Financial Instruments Business and securing appropriate operations of Financial Instruments Exchanges; and (iii) to enable fair price formation of financial instruments, etc. through the full utilization of the functions of the capital markets, and thereby to contribute to the sound development of the national economy and the protection of investors. Thus, we can say the term "Securities" marks the scope of the application of the FIEA.

The FIEA defines Securities to mean: (i) national government bonds; (ii) municipal bonds; (iii) debentures issued by a juridical person under a special act; (iv) specified bond certificates prescribed in the Act on the Securitization of Assets;[1] (v) bond certificates; (vi) investment securities issued by a juridical person established under a special act; (vii) preferred equity investment certificates prescribed in the Act on Preferred Equity Investment by Cooperative Structured Financial Institutions;[2] (viii) preferred equity investment certificates and securities indicating subscription rights for new preferred equity investments prescribed in the Act on the Securitization of Assets; (ix) share certificates and share option certificates; (x) beneficiary certificates of

Furthermore, the definition of "Securities" includes (a) beneficial rights of a trust; (b) rights that are claimable against a foreign person and that have the characteristics of the rights specified in (a) above; (c) membership rights of a general partnership company (gomeikaisha) or limited partnership company (goshikaisya) (limited to those specified by a cabinet order) or membership rights of a limited liability company; (d) membership rights of a foreign juridical person that have the characteristics of rights specified in (c) above; (e)[7] among the rights based on a partnership agreement provided in Article 667(1) of the Civil Code, an anonymous partnership agreement provided in Article 535 of the Commercial Code, a limited partnership agreement for investment provided in Article 3(1) of the Limited Partnership Act for Investment[8] or a limited liability partnership agreement provided in Article 3(1) of the Limited Liability Partnership Act, membership rights of an incorporated association and other rights (excluding those based on laws and regulations of a foreign state), rights for which the holders thereof (hereinafter referred to as an "Equity Investor" in this item) can receive dividends of profits arising from the business conducted by using money or something similar to money invested or contributed by the Equity Investors (such business is hereinafter referred to as "Investor-Financed Business" in this item) or distribution of the assets of Investor-Financed Business that does not fall under any of the categories set forth in the sub-items of Article 2, clause 2, item 5 of the FIEA (for example, where all of the Equity Investors participate in Investor-Financed Business as specified by a cabinet order, the rights of those Equity Investors, and the rights of the relevant Equity Investors with respect to which it is provided that the Equity Investor will not receive dividends of profits or a distribution of the assets of the Investor-Financed Business in an amount exceeding the amount invested or contributed respectively by them); (f) rights based on laws and regulations of a foreign state that are similar to those specified in (e) above; or (g) in addition to Specified Electronically Recorded Monetary Claims and those listed in the preceding items, rights specified by a cabinet order as those for which it is found, when taking into consideration the fact that they have economic characteristics similar to the Securities provided in the preceding paragraph and rights set forth in the preceding items and other attributes, necessary and appropriate to secure the public interest or the protection of investors by deeming them to be Securities.

[4]Securities or certificates that indicate an option.

[5]Securities or certificates that indicate a depositary receipt.

§ JP:26 "Financial Instruments Business" defined

Another important definition under the FIEA is "Financial Instruments Business." The FIEA defines activities detailed in Article 2, paragraph 8 of the FIEA as Financial Instruments Business and requires a person who intends "to conduct the Financial Instruments Business" to be registered with the Prime Minister. The term "to conduct the Financial Instruments Business" means to conduct the [7]Collective investment schemes.

[8]Law No.90, June 3, 1998.

Financial Instruments Business with an intention to do so repeatedly and on an ongoing basis. Therefore, if a person intends to conduct such activities repeatedly and on an ongoing basis, he or she is required to register the Financial Instruments Business, even if it is the first time he or she has conducted such activities. Since it is not a requirement that the activities are conducted for profit, even activities conducted without charge may fall under the definition of Financial Instruments Business. The person or corporation who is registered in relation to a Financial Instruments Business is supervised by the Financial Services Agency and subject to the disciplinary regulations of the FIEA, etc.

The only type of business that was previously regulated by the SEA was "securities business," which was equivalent to "securities related business"[1] under the FIEA. However, the type of business regulated by the FIEA also includes financial futures business, commodity investment dealing business, beneficiary rights dealing business, investment advisory business, business relating to discretionary investment agreements, investment trust management business, investment corporation asset management business, and mortgage securities business, as well as securities business. Additionally, since the 2006 amendment to the FIEA (as mentioned above), Financial Instruments Business includes solicitation of applications to acquire newly issued beneficial securities or equities of collective investment schemes by issuers themselves (so-called, "self-solicitation"), conclusion of Investment Advisory Contracts[2] or Discretionary Investment Contracts[3] by agencies or intermediary services, management of trust funds or funds of collective investment schemes as investments mainly in securities or rights relating to derivative transactions (so-called "self-management"), and the book-entry transfer of bonds, etc. relating to securities transactions, and so on.

The term "Financial Instruments Business" is divided into the following classifications: "Type I Financial Instruments Business," "Type II Financial Instruments Business," "Investment Advisory and Agency Business," "Investment Management Business," and "Specially Permitted Businesses for Qualified Institutional Investors, etc." A person or corporation who intends to conduct any of the types of business above in the course of trade must apply for registration of a Financial Instruments Business, indicate the type of business they intend to conduct, and fulfill the necessary requirements depending on the type of business they intend to carry out. To add a new type of business to a registered business, an amendment to registration is required; amendments to registrations are separately screened to ensure that the specific requirements for the new type of business are fulfilled.

[2]Art. 2, para. 8, item 11 of the FIEA.

[3]Art. 2, para. 8, item 12 (b) of the FIEA.

"Financial Instruments Business" is divided into the classifications above in order to establish separate entry and assets regulations specific to the characteristics of each business.

§ JP:27 "Type I Financial Instruments Business" defined

The term "Type I Financial Instruments Business" means, in the context of Financial Instruments Business, the conducting of any of the acts listed in Article 28, paragraph 1 of the FIEA in the course of trade.

In addition to sales or purchase, intermediary, brokerage or agency service for sales and purchase for Securities (only (i) to (xxi) in 1.1 above), businesses such as Over-the-Counter Transactions of Derivatives, etc., asset management business, wholesale underwriting business and PTS (proprietary trading systems) can be conducted only by a Type I Financial Instruments Business. This includes securities business, such as the safekeeping of securities, and financial forward trading business, which was provided for in the SEA before the 2006 amendment. Additionally, a person who has been registered as a Type I Financial Instruments Business Operator is permitted to conduct all the types of Financial Instruments Business, including Type II Financial Instruments Business and Financial Instruments Intermediary Service Provider.

§ JP:28 "Type II Financial Instruments Business" defined

The term "Type II Financial Instruments Business" means, in the context of a Financial Instruments Business, the conducting of any of the acts listed in Article 28, paragraph 2 of the FIEA in the course of trade.

The term refers to sales or purchase, intermediary, brokerage or agency service for sales and purchase, Public Offering, Private Placement or Secondary Distribution, or dealing in a Public Offering, Secondary Distribution of Securities or dealing in a Private Placement (excluding underwriting) of instruments which have low liquidity among Securities, and so on, in the course of trade. It includes the commodity investment dealing business, the beneficiary rights dealing business, and the mortgage securities business, which were not included in the SEA before the 2006 amendment.

§ JP:29 "Investment Advisory and Agency Business" defined

The term "Investment Advisory and Agency Business" means, in the context of a Financial Instruments Business, the conducting of any of the acts listed in Article 28, paragraph 3 of the FIEA in the course of trade. It means the conducting of any of the following activities in the course of trade: (i) the conclusion of the Investment Advisory Contract, that is a contract in which one of the parties promises to provide the other party with advice on the Value, etc. of Securities[1] and on investment decisions based on an analysis of the Value, etc. of Financial Instruments,[2] orally, in writing or otherwise, and the other party promises to pay remuneration therefor (such a contract is hereinafter referred to as an "Investment Advisory Contract"), and the provision of advice under such an Investment Advisory Contract, or (ii) the conclusion of an Investment Advisory Contract or a Discretionary Investment Contract by an agency or intermediary service.

§ JP:30 "Investment Management Business" defined

The term "Investment Management Business" means, in the context of a Financial Instruments Business, the conducting of any of the acts listed in Article 28, paragraph 4 of the FIEA in the course of trade. It means the conducting of any of the following activities in the course of trade:

(1) The conclusion of a contract on entrustment of assets investment with a registered investment corporation, or a Discretionary Investment Contract, that is a contract wherein one of the parties is fully or partly entrusted by the other party with the discretion in making investment decisions based on analysis of values, etc. of Financial Instruments and is also entrusted with the authority necessary for making investments on behalf of the other party based on such investment decisions, and an investment of money or other property in Securities or rights pertaining to Derivative Transactions based on an analysis of the Values, etc. of Financial Instruments under such a contract;

(2) An investment of money or other property by a person who holds rights indicated on the investment securities, investment corporation debentures or the like, or other rights specified by a cabinet order, as an investment in Securities or rights pertaining to Derivative Transactions based on an analysis of the Values, etc. of Financial Instruments; or

(3) An investment of money or other property by a person who holds equity in a collective investment scheme, or other rights specified by a cabinet order, as an investment mainly in Securities or rights pertaining to Derivative Transactions conducted based on an analysis of the Values, etc. of Financial Instruments.

A person who intends to conduct an act described in (3) above, is, in principal, not required to apply for the registration of a Financial Instruments Business, provided he or she has filed for the registration of a Specially Permitted Business for Qualified Institutional Investors, etc. as below.

[Section JP:29]

[1]See Art. 2, para. 8, item 11(a) of the FIEA.

[2]See Art. 2, para. 8, item 11(b) of the FIEA.

§ JP:31 "Specially Permitted Business for Qualified Institutional Investors, etc." defined

The term "Specially Permitted Business for Qualified Institutional Investors, etc.," means the conducting of any of the acts listed in each of the items of Article 63, paragraph 1 of the FIEA in the course of trade. The acts which fall under the definition of Specially Permitted Business for Qualified Institutional Investors, etc. include the Private Placement of equities of a collective investment scheme or any of the other rights listed in items (v) or (vi) of Article 2, paragraph 2 of the FIEA, and Investment Management Business relating to them. A person who intends to conduct an act that falls under the definition of Specially Permitted Business for Qualified Institutional Investors, etc. is not required to apply for the registration of a Financial Instruments Business, provided he or she has filed for the registration of a Specially Permitted Business for Qualified institutional Investors, etc.

VII. PUBLIC OFFERING, SECONDARY DISTRIBUTION AND PRIVATE PLACEMENT OF SECURITIES

A. IN GENERAL

§ JP:32 Overview

One of the major regulatory pillars of the FIEA is the regulation of the primary market. The FIEA requires any public offering of newly issued Securities (boshu) or secondary distribution of Securities (uridashi) to be registered with the Prime Minister (administered by the Commissioner of Financial Services Agency), unless it is exempted from the registration requirement of the FIEA. The exemptions from the registration requirement vary depending on the liquidity of the financial instrument.

B. HIGH LIQUIDITY FINANCIAL INSTRUMENTS

§ JP:33 Public Offering/Private Placement

Under the current provisions of the FIEA, a "Public Offering of Securities" relating to high liquidity financial instruments, such as Securities listed in each of the items of Article 2, paragraph 1 of the FIEA, Rights to be Indicated on Securities deemed as Securities in Article 2, paragraph 2 of the FIEA, and Specified Electronically Recorded Monetary Claims, consist of (a) solicitations of offers to acquire newly issued securities from 50 or more persons (excluding QIIs described below where it falls under the case described in the cabinet order as solicited Securities acquired by the relevant QIIs unlikely to transfer to any person other than QIIs), and (b) solicitations other than Solicitations Only for Qualified Institutional Investors (hereinafter referred to as "QII"), Solicitations Only for Professional Investors, and Solicitations for a Small Number of Investors, which fall within the category of a "Private Placement of Securities," respectively.

§ JP:34 Solicitations Only for Qualified Institutional Investors

The first category falling within "Private Placement" is the "Solicitation Only for Qualified Institutional Investors." The term "Solicitation Only for Qualified Institutional Investors" means a solicitation for acquisition made only to QIIs (regardless of their number), where the solicited Securities are, as specified by a cabinet order, not likely to be transferred from the person who acquires them to any other person other than a QII.

The exemption requirements for a Solicitation Only for Qualified Institutional Investors "if the solicited Securities are not likely to be transferred from the person who acquired them to any other person other than a QII" differ between the case of equity-related Securities, such as shares of stocks and stock options, and that of other Securities. For equity-related Securities to fulfill the exemption requirements the issuer of the relevant equity-related Securities must not be a person who has issued the same type equity-related Securities as those to be solicited for the relevant placement, or the same type shares of stock as those to be issued upon the exercise of stock options to be solicited for the relevant placement (the relevant equity-related Securities and the relevant stock options mentioned above, collectively "relevant equity-related Securities, etc."): (a) that are listed on any Financial Instruments Exchange or OTC registered securities, (b) have filed Securities Registration Statements, (c) are held by 1000 or more persons when the paid-up capital of the issuer corporation is ¥500,000,000 or more. Additionally, it is necessary that the same type of Securities as the relevant equity related Securities, etc. are not Securities for Professional Investors. Furthermore, it is required that a solicitation be made on the condition that an agreement for the transfer of the relevant equity-related Securities is concluded that provides that the person who has acquired such relevant equity-related Securities does not transfer them to persons other than QIIs.

For Securities other than equity-related Securities, the Securities must meet the exemption requirements specified by a cabinet office ordinance as being equivalent to the above requirements for equity-related Securities. For example, in order for corporate bonds (excluding book entry bonds) to meet the requirements for exemption, the transfer restriction (i.e., the person who has acquired the bonds must not transfer the bonds to persons other than QIIs) must be stated on the certificate of the relevant corporate bonds (which must be distributed to such persons) or the documents which are distributed to persons who acquire the bonds.

§ JP:35 Solicitations Only for Professional Investors

The second category of "Private Placement" is "Solicitations Only for Professional Investors." The term "Solicitations Only for Professional Investors" means solicitations for acquisition made only to Professional Investors that meet all of the following requirements (excluding solicitations falling under Solicitations Only for Qualified Institutional Investors).

The first requirement is that where the counterparties to the relevant solicitation do not include the State, the Bank of Japan, or QIIs, the solicitation must be made by a Financial Instruments Business Operator, etc.[1] pursuant to entrustment from customers or for the Financial Instruments Business Operator's own benefit, etc.

The second requirement is that it must be unlikely that the solicited Securities, as specified by a cabinet order, will be transferred from the acquirers thereof to any persons other than Professional Investors, etc. (meaning a Professional Investor or Non-Resident).

This exemption was added in the 2008 amendment to the FIEA to establish a market for professional investors. With regard to Solicitations Only for Professional Investors, the issuer is exempted from the application of the primary disclosure regulation which requires the issuer's information and securities information to be made available for public inspection; only minimum disclosure requirements apply under the self-regulatory standards of the Financial Instruments Exchange.

§ JP:36 Solicitations for a Small Number of Investors

The third category of "Private Placement" is "Solicitations for a Small Number of Investors". The term "Solicitations for a Small Number of Investors" means solicitations that do not fall under the categories of "solicitations made for a large number of persons" specified in Article 2, paragraph 2, item 1 of the FIEA, and Solicitations Only for Qualified Institutional Investors and Solicitations Only for Professional Investors, where the solicited Securities are, as specified by a cabinet order, unlikely to be owned by a large number of persons.

The first requirement is that the solicitation does not fall under the categories of solicitations made for a large number of persons, Solicitations Only for Qualified Institutional Investors, or Solicitations Only for Professional Investors. The first category means solicitations made for a large number of persons, solicitations of offers to acquire newly issued securities from 50 or more persons (excluding QIIs, where the solicitations to the QIIs fall under the case described in the cabinet order as solicited Securities acquired by the relevant QIIs unlikely to transfer to any person other than QIIs). In determining whether or not the number of persons to whom the solicitation is directed is less than 50, if during the 6 months preceding the present solicitation the same type of Securities were solicited, the number of persons in such previous solicitation and that of the present solicitation are aggregated and if such aggregated number is 50 or more, then the present solicitation is not deemed a Solicitation for a Small Number of Investors and is subject to the registration requirement.

[Section JP:35]

[1]Financial Instruments Business Operators, etc. collectively refers to Financial Instruments Business Operators and Registered Financial Institutions (Art. 34 of the FIEA).

The second requirement is that the solicited Securities are "unlikely to be owned by a large number of persons." In order to fulfill this requirement, for example, if the solicited Securities are shares of stock, the same type of the solicited Securities must not have been listed on any securities exchange, not have been filed with the SRS, and the total number of holders thereof must be less than 1,000. If the solicited shares do not so qualify, any offering of the same shares, even where such shares are solicited to less than 50 persons, constitutes a "Public Offering" and, in the case of any other type of Securities, such Securities are subject to the restriction that they cannot be transferred unless made en bloc to a single transferee.

For Securities other than equity-related Securities such as shares of stock, the Securities must meet the exemption requirements specified by a cabinet office ordinance. For example, in order for corporate bonds (excluding book entry bonds) to meet the requirements for exemption, the transfer restriction that the person who has acquired the bonds must not transfer the bonds other than in the case where they transfer all of them to one person must be stated on the certificate of the relevant corporate bonds (which must be distributed to such persons) and the documents that are distributed to persons who acquire the bonds.

§ JP:37 Secondary Distribution of Securities

The term "Secondary Distribution of Securities" previously meant an offer to sell or a solicitation of an offer to buy securities that are issued and outstanding to or from 50 or more persons on uniform terms. However, since the 2009 amendment, the wording "on uniform terms" has been deleted from the meaning of this term. Additionally, the concept of "private secondary distribution" corresponds to the Private Placement established at the time. Therefore, the requirements for a "Secondary Distribution of Securities" are now similar to the requirements for a "Primary Offering of Securities".

C. LOW LIQUIDITY FINANCIAL INSTRUMENTS

§ JP:38 Public Offering of Securities

For financial instruments with low liquidity such as collective investment equities and other Securities listed in Article 2, paragraph 2 of the FIEA, "Public Offering of Securities" means a solicitation of applications to acquire newly-issued Securities that, as specified by a cabinet order, will render the Securities pertaining thereto to be owned by a considerably large number of persons who respond to the solicitation. The term "a considerably large number of persons" refers to the case where the number of holders of the relevant Securities is 500 or more. Unlike the Securities listed in Article 2, paragraph 1 of the FIEA, whether or not a solicitation of financial instruments with low liquidity falls under a Public Offering of Securities is determined by the number of holders of the relevant Securities who accept the solicitation, not the number of persons to whom the solicitation was made.

§ JP:39 Secondary Distribution of Securities

For financial instruments with low liquidity, the term "Secondary Distribution of Securities" differs from that relating to the Securities listed in Article 2, paragraph 1 of the FIEA and is prescribed the following definition, subject to the condition that there are 500 holders of the relevant Securities. Specifically, it is defined as a solicitation for selling, etc. that, as specified by a cabinet order, will render the Securities pertaining thereto to be owned by a considerably large number of persons who respond to the solicitation. Similar to a Public Offering of Securities for financial instruments with low liquidity, the term "a considerably large number of persons" refers to the case where the number of holders of the relevant Securities is 500 or more.

VIII. DISCLOSURE REQUIREMENT IN THE PRIMARY MARKET

§ JP:40 Registration Requirement

No Public Offering of Securities or Secondary Distribution of Securities may be made unless a registration statement is filed with the Prime Minister by an issuer of such securities except, inter alia, in the following cases:

(1) where an issuer solicits for the acquisition or sale of its stock acquisition rights to certain officers or employees of it or its wholly-owned subsidiary;
(2) where "disclosure has been made" with respect to such securities;
(3) where a Secondary Distribution of Securities is made by a Financial Instruments Business Operators, etc. for existing securities issued in a foreign country that meet certain requirements such as availability of price information thereof in the Japanese market; and
(4) where the total amount of issue or sale of such securities is less than one hundred million yen (¥100,000,000).[1]

The filing exemption (1) above applies to the granting of stock options to officers or employees of the issuer or its wholly-owned subsidiaries. As stated in (2) above, when a Secondary Distribution of Securities is made of securities with respect to which disclosure has been made, no filing of a registration statement is required.[2] If the issuer of the subject securities has registered securities of the same type in their previous Public Offering of Securities or Secondary Distribution of Securities and has been subject to the continuous disclosure requirement or securities reports have been filed due to their listing or OTC registration or otherwise, it is deemed that "disclosure has been made" with respect to such securities.[3] However, even in the case of the Secondary Distribution of Securities where disclosure has been made, a prospectus needs to be prepared in certain circumstances.[4] This exemption from registration is applicable only to the Secondary Distribution of existing securities not to the Public Offering of newly issued securities. The Cabinet Order specifies the requirements to apply for the filing exemption (3) above.[5] Although these requirements are specified for each type of security, it is generally required that price information of the securities within the Japanese market and issuer information to be disclosed under the laws or regulations of foreign exchanges be easily available through the Internet or other mediums and that they are traded continuously in a foreign country. For the purpose of determining ¥100,000,000 as set forth in (4) above, the amount of issues or sales made during the period of one year preceding the present offering, or the offerings made concurrently with the present offering, are aggregated with the amount of the present offering.[6]

The following securities are exempted from the registration requirement: Japanese government bonds; municipal bonds; bonds issued by a juridical person pursuant to special law; capital contribution certificates issued by a corporation established by a special law, beneficial certificates of loan trusts; low liquidity financial instruments deemed as securities under Article 2, Section 2 of the FIEA; bonds guaranteed by the Japanese government; and bonds issued by an international organization of which Japan is a member (e.g., IBRD bonds and ADB bonds).[7]

When (a) a Secondary Distribution of Securities is made where disclosure has been made and the total amount of the selling price is not less than ¥100,000,000, and (b) a Public Offering of Securities or Secondary Distribution of Securities has been made where the total amount of the issue price or selling price is less than ¥100,000,000 but more than ¥10,000,000, a simpler form, a "securities notification statement", must be filed with the Prime Minister before the commencement of the offering or distribution in certain circumstances.[8] Securities notification statements are not open for public inspection.

In addition to the above, a similar registration requirement is also applied to the issue or delivery of securities made in connection with issuer's reorganization procedures such as merger, company split and share exchange,[9] unless disclosure has not been made in respect of shares or other certain equity-type securities of a reorganized company, or disclosure has been made in respect of the securities to be issued or delivered to the shareholders of a reorganized company.[10]

§ JP:41 Filing of Securities Registration Statements

The issuer of securities is required to file a SRS with the Prime Minister to conduct the Public Offering of Securities or Secondary Distribution of Securities.[1] The SRS must be prepared in accordance with the form and instructions prescribed by the relevant disclosure ordinance. An SRS generally contains (a) information on the securities being offered, including the terms of the offering, and (b) information on the issuer of the securities being offered, including its financial information, and (c) if the securities are debt securities guaranteed by any other person, information on the guarantor. The financial information, which includes both consolidated and non-consolidated financial statements of the issuer, must be prepared in accordance with the respective rules governing the consolidated financial statements and non-consolidated financial statements, and audited by a certified public accountant or an audit firm in accordance with the applicable rules.[2]

If the issuer has filed a securities report(s) continuously for one year or more, such issuer may incorporate them by combining copies of its most recent securities report, its exhibits, its subsequently filed quarterly report(s) or a semi-annual report (including their amendments), if any, and stating certain additional subsequent material information in the SRS ("incorporation by combining").[3] Further, if such issuer's shares are either listed on a Financial Instruments Exchange or registered on a OTC market, and certain qualifications such as trading volume and market capitalization are met, the issuer may utilize the information contained in its latest securities report, and its subsequently filed quarterly report(s) or semi-annual and extraordinary report(s), if any, by incorporating such information by reference thereto ("incorporation by reference").[4]

§ JP:42 Public Inspection of SRS

In order to make the information contained in the SRS and its exhibits accessible to investors, the law requires the Prime Minister to place the filed SRS and its exhibits at the offices of the Kanto Local Financial Bureau and of the Regional Financial Bureau having jurisdiction over the location of the head office of the registrant and it must be open for public inspection for a period of five years (in the case of an SRS that incorporates securities reports and other documents by reference, one year).[1] In addition, the issuer must keep such documents at its head office and principal branch offices and make them available for public inspection.[2]

Once an SRS is filed with the Prime Minister, solicitation may be made; however, in order for the investor to acquire the securities the registration should have become effective.[3] The registration becomes effective generally 15 days from the day of filing (the waiting period).[4] The Prime Minister may designate a shorter period or may notify the registrant that the registration will become immediately effective or will become effective the next day if the Prime Minister concludes that the public can easily understand the contents of the filed registration documents or information on the registrant has been widely disseminated to the public.[5]

If, prior to the effective date of the registration, there is any change with respect to any material fact that should be stated in the SRS or if there arises any situation prescribed by the Cabinet Office Ordinance calling for the modification of the contents of the registration documents, the registrant should file an "amendment statement" or if the registrant finds it necessary to do so, it may file an amendment statement.[6] The Prime Minister may issue an order for filing an amendment statement if the registration documents are defective or insufficient with respect to any material facts to be stated therein.[7] When an amendment statement is filed, the aforementioned waiting period before the registration becomes effective starting from the day of filing of such amendment statement.

§ JP:43 Shelf Registration

Any issuer who satisfies the requirements for registration by incorporation by reference as referred to above may make blanket registration of future potential offering(s) by filing with the Prime Minister a "shelf registration statement" setting out the period during which the securities are intended to be offered (either one year or two years), the type of securities, proposed total amount or maximum residual amount of the offering and anticipated principal underwriters, in accordance with the Cabinet Office Ordinance.[1] The shelf registration becomes effective after 15 days have elapsed or less as in the case of the SRS.[2] Once the shelf registration becomes effective, no SRS needs to be filed for each individual offering of any part of the securities covered by the shelf registration, however, the registrant must file with the Prime Minister a "shelf registration supplement" setting out the amount of the offering and other terms of the offering.[3] Upon filing of a shelf registration supplement, the investors may acquire the subject securities. The shelf registration ceases to be effective upon the expiry of the intended period of the offering.[4] If prior to such expiry the offerings of the total amount registered have been completed, the registrant must file a "shelf registration withdrawal statement" with the Prime Minister.[5]

If during the effective period of the shelf registration a situation arises as prescribed by the law and Cabinet Office Ordinance, the registrant must file an "amendment shelf registration statement."[6] However, no amendment may be made to increase the total amount or maximum residual amount of offerings, change the proposed period of offerings, or change the type of securities subject to the registration.[7]

§ JP:44 Acquisition of Securities and Use of Prospectus

Once the SRS is filed, solicitation can commence; however, until and unless the registration becomes effective, no firm commitment for the acquisition of the subject securities by investors can be made.[1]

The issuer of securities of which Public Offering of Securities or Secondary Distribution of Securities is subject to registration is required to prepare a prospectus in connection with such offering or distribution.[2] The issuer, the seller, the underwriters, securities companies, registered financial institutions or Financial Instruments Intermediary Service Providers are required to deliver to the investors prior to or at the same time with such investors making commitment for the acquisition, a prospectus meeting the requirements prescribed by the law, except in the case of the sale to QIIs (unless so requested by such QIIs) or where the investors have held the same type of securities or any persons living together with the investors have already received or will receive the prospectus.[3] The delivery of a prospectus is also required in the event of sale (not by way of Public Offering of Securities or Secondary Distribution or Securities) of an unsold portion of securities (exclusive of listed securities and OTC registered securities) subject to a Public Offering of Securities or Secondary Distribution of Securities during the period of three months from the effective date of registration.[4]

A prospectus whose delivery is required by the law as stated above ("delivery prospectus") should contain the matters prescribed by laws and regulations, and basically, its contents should be substantially identical to those of the SRS.[5] However, in the case of the beneficiary securities of investment trusts or investment units, the contents of a delivery prospectus may be simplified. The information omitted from a delivery prospectus is included in another type of prospectus, and such prospectus is delivered to investors only upon their request (request prospectus). Any documents, illustrations or other materials, whether in physical or electronic form, may be used for the purposes of a Public Offering of Securities or Secondary Distribution of Securities, unless such materials contain any misstatement.[6] In the case of offerings under a shelf registration, the provisions for the use of a prospectus and other materials under ordinary registration are applied similarly.[7]

IX. CRIMINAL AND CIVIL LIABILITY

§ JP:45 SRS and Shelf Registration Statement

Under the FIEA, the filing of an SRS or shelf registration statement or their exhibits or amendments that contains a material misstatement is subject to criminal sanction.[1] Criminal sanctions may also be imposed if a Public Offering of Securities or Secondary Distribution of Securities is carried out without the required registrations of such documents.[2] In addition, if a director, statutory accounting advisor, statutory auditor or executive officer of a corporation uses documents containing a material misstatement for the offering, such director, statutory accounting advisor, statutory auditor or executive officer is subject to a penalty under the Company Act.[3]

If an SRS or shelf registration statement contains any untrue statement of a material fact or omits to state any material fact required to be stated therein or necessary to make the statements therein not misleading, the issuer of the subject securities (the registrant) is liable for any damages sustained by the investors who acquired the subject securities in the Public Offering of Securities or Secondary Distribution of Securities.[4] However, if the issuer proves that the investors knew of such misstatement at the time of their subscription to the subject securities, the issuer is not so liable.

The amount of compensation for damages in the case of such material misstatement or omission is the amount paid by the investors for the acquisition of the securities less the market value of the securities at the time of claiming the damages or, if the investors have already disposed of the securities, the amount they paid for the acquisition less the price for such disposition.[5] If the issuer proves that any portion of the damages sustained by the investors resulted from causes other than a decline in the price of the securities attributable to the material misstatement, the issuer is not liable for such portion of the damages.[6] The investors may not receive compensation for damages unless they make a claim for damages within 3 years from the date on which the investors discovered or could have discovered by the exercise of due diligence such misstatement, or if 7 years have passed from the day on which the subject registration became effective.[7]

In addition to the issuer, the following persons may also be liable for damages sustained by the investors due to the material misstatement: (1) directors, statutory accounting advisors, and statutory auditors, officers or their equivalent ("officers") of the issuer at the time of filing the SRS or shelf registration statement; (2) the seller of securities in the Secondary Distribution of securities; (3) certified public accountants or audit firm who certified the audit report contained in the SRS or shelf registration statement; and (4) the securities companies that entered into the underwriting agreement with the issuer or seller of the securities.[8] As in the case of the issuer's civil liability, they are not so liable if they prove that the investors knew of such misstatement at the time of their subscription to the subject securities.[9] Moreover, these persons may raise another defense to avoid the liability, respectively. If the persons enumerated in (1) or (2) above prove that they did not know and, in spite of their exercise of due diligence, could not have known such misstatement, if the persons enumerated in (3) above prove that they acted in good faith and without intent or negligence in preparing the audit report, or if the persons referred to in (4) above prove that they did not know such misstatement and, with respect to the parts other than the financial section, they could not have known in spite of their exercise of due diligence, they are exonerated from such liability.[10] There is no specific provision in the FIEA concerning the amount of damages.

The issuer of the securities (the registrant) is also liable for any damages due to the material misstatement sustained by any person who acquired the subject securities other than through the Public Offering of Securities or Secondary Distribution of Securities for the period during which the documents containing such misstatement were available for public inspection. However, in no event may the amount of compensation for damages in this case exceed the amount specified above in the case of civil liability upon a Public Offering of Securities or Secondary Distribution of Securities.[11] As in the case of civil liability upon the Public Offering of Securities or Secondary Distribution of Securities, the registrant is not so liable if it proves that the persons who acquired the securities knew such misstatement at the time of their subscription. In this case, it is not necessary for the claimants to prove the amount of damages caused by such misstatement if they acquired the relevant securities within a year before the fact of existence of such misstatement is publicly announced and thereafter continue to hold such securities up to the day of the public announcement. Here, the amount of damages is deemed as the average market price (if not applicable, the expected sale price) of such securities over the period of one month prior to the day of the public announcement less the average market price over the period of one month after the day of the public announcement.[12] If the issuer proves that any portion of the damages sustained by the claimants resulted from causes other than a decline in the price of the securities attributable to such misstatement, the issuer is not liable for such portion of the damages.[13] Otherwise, the court may decide, in its discretion, a reasonable reduction of the amount of damages if the court finds all or any part of the damages sustained by the claimants resulted from causes other than a decline in the price of the securities attributable to such misstatement; however, the amount of the damages attributable to the other causes is, by its nature, extremely difficult to prove.[14] The statute of limitation applies in the same manner as the issuer's civil liability upon the Public Offering of Securities or Secondary Distribution of Securities above.[15]

In addition to the issuer, the persons enumerated in (1) and (3) above are also liable for the damages sustained by any person who, unaware of the material misstatement in the SRS or shelf registration statement, acquired the securities other than by the Public Offering of Securities or Secondary Distribution of Securities.[16] The same defense as good-faith and proper due diligence in regard to their civil liability upon the Public Offering of Securities or Secondary Distribution of Securities above is applicable to the persons enumerated in (1) and (3), respectively.[17]

§ JP:46 Prospectus and Other Materials

The issuer of securities that prepared the prospectus pursuant to Article 13, paragraph 1 of the FIEA, which contains any material misstatement, is liable to for the damages caused by any person who acquired the securities in the Public Offering of Securities or Secondary Distribution of Securities upon delivery of such prospectus in the same way as discussed above with respect to the SRS and shelf registration statement.[1] A similar liability applies to the officers of the issuer and the seller of the securities.[2] If the officer of a corporation uses a prospectus containing a material misstatement, such officer is subject to a penalty under the Company Act.[3]

Any person who induces any other person to acquire securities by use of a prospectus or "other materials" that contain any untrue statement of a material fact or omits to state any material fact required to be stated therein or necessary to make the statements therein not misleading is liable for any damages sustained by such other person not knowing such misstatement.[4] However, if it is proven that the person who used the prospectus for inducement did not know and, in spite of their exercise of due diligence, could not have known such misstatement, such person will not be liable for damages sustained by a person who acquire the securities. This provision applies not only to a Public Offering of Securities or Secondary Distribution of Securities requiring registration but also to a Secondary Distribution of Securities for which disclosure has been made and registration is not required.

§ JP:54 Parent Company Status Report

A company that holds majority voting rights of or has a similar relationship with an issuer of the securities listed on a financial instruments exchange or OTC registered securities and subject to a securities report filing requirement, must prepare and file a report concerning its shareholders and other information specified by a Cabinet Office Ordinance as necessary and appropriate for the public interests or protection of investors for each business year, unless such parent company is subject to a securities report filing requirement.[1]

§ JP:55 Public Inspection, Amendment Report, Liability

The securities report, quarterly report, semi-annual report and extraordinary report are held at the offices of the Kanto Local Finance Bureau and other Regional Finance Bureaus having jurisdiction over the location of the head office and open for public inspection for the respective periods prescribed by the FIEA, and the issuer must maintain copies thereof at its head office and principal branch offices, open for public inspection.[1]

The FIEA contains provisions similar to those applicable to the SRS as to the amendments to the securities report, and other continuous reports as set forth above and the relevant parties' liability resulting from material misstatement.[2]

In addition, the issuer of listed securities is subject to various timely disclosure requirements prescribed by the rules of the relevant financial instruments exchange on which such securities are listed.

concerning securities (Financial Instruments Business) and derivative transactions that were previously separately regulated under several laws and regulations. The FIEA generally requires business operators who carry out any Financial Instruments Business to obtain registration (toroku) according to the category of contemplated business activity. The registered business operators (Financial Instruments Business Operators and other business operators described in 4. below) are regulated by the Prime Minister whose power is generally delegated to the Commissioner of the Financial Services Agency.[1] Without such registration, no person may engage in any Financial Instruments Business in Japan as business.[2]

When an applicant applies for registration as a Financial Instruments Business Operator, the Prime Minister cannot refuse to register it as a Financial Instruments Business Operator unless the applicant falls within any of the grounds for refusal to register proscribed by the FIEA.[3]

In addition to the registration, if a Financial Instruments Business Operator intends to engage in the business of running a proprietary trading system (PTS), it must obtain a validation (ninka) from the Prime Minister.[4] Separate qualifications that must be fulfilled are prescribed by the FIEA for the granting by the Prime Minister of the validation.[5]

The categories of Financial Instruments Business are Type I Financial Instruments Business, Type II Financial Instruments Business, Investment Advisory/Agency Business and Investment Management Business. Type I Financial Instruments Business deals with categories of securities (Type I Securities) with high liquidity such as stocks, bonds and investment trust beneficial certificates under the registration of Type I Financial Instruments Business, operators of which are subject to more strict regulations than those applicable to Type II Financial Instruments Business. The reasons for disqualification for registration of an operator of Type I Financial Instruments Business, which is one category of the Financial Business Operators, for example, include: (1) the applicant is not a joint stock corporation (kabushiki kaisha) that has a board of directors and corporate auditor or the committee system, (2) the amount of paid-in capital is less than ¥50,000,000 (that may be higher for a certain underwriting business), (3) the amount of net assets is less than ¥50,000,000 (that may be higher for a certain primary underwriting business), (4) the capital adequacy ratio is less than 120%, (5) a similar registration has been revoked, (6) it or its major shareholders, or their officers received a criminal penalty for violation of the FIEA or related laws, (7) the applicant is concurrently engaged in another business deemed inappropriate in the public interest, and (8) its staffing is not deemed sufficient for it to properly engage in the securities business.

ments Business deals with other categories of securities (Type II Securities) with no- or limited- liquidity such as beneficiary rights in a trust issuing no certificates, membership rights of a general partnership company or limited partnership company (limited to those specified by a Cabinet Order), or membership rights of a limited liability company and rights in a corrective investment scheme under the registration of Type II Financial Instruments Business. The FIEA distinguishes between the Investment Advisory/Agency Business and the Investment Management Business. Simply giving investment advice to customers on a fee basis falls within the first category.[6] Operating discretionary accounts for customers falls within the latter category of business, which is subject to more strict regulations than the first category.[7]

The principal actors in the public securities market are securities companies as Type I Financial Instruments Business Operators.

The Type I Financial Instruments Business Operator may engage in certain peripheral businesses to its main securities business.[8] In addition, by filing a report with the Prime Minister, the securities company may engage in certain associated businesses.[9] Furthermore, it is possible for a securities company to engage in any other business (except when the Prime Minister considers it inappropriate in the public interests or for the protection of investors) by obtaining the approval (shonin) of the Prime Minister.[10]

The foregoing regulations are basically applicable to foreign securities firms intending to engage in Financial Instruments Business in Japan.[11]

Type I Financial Instruments Business Operators are subject to various financial (mainly, capital adequacy ratio) and assets regulations. They are required to provide "reserves for possible losses from financial instruments transactions" (kinyu shohin torihiki sekinin junbikin) in accordance with the FIEA and the regulations thereunder.[12] Securities companies in the Securities Custody Business, which is one category of business that Type I Financial Instruments Business Operators may conduct, are required to keep customers' money and other assets separately from their own money and assets,[13] and the use of customers' assets for charging as securities or securities lending is subject to the written consent of the customers.[14]

§ JP:57 Other Financial Institutions

Article 33 of the FIEA generally prohibits banks and other financial institutions (the "Financial Institutions") from engaging in securities-related business and Investment Management Business except for certain limited types of securities and transactions.[1] Article 33-2 of the FIEA requires a Financial Institution to obtain registration (toroku) with the Prime Minister if it intends to engage in the securities business ("Registered Financial Institution"); provided that the scope of activities of a Registered Financial Institution is restricted compared to a Financial Instruments Business Operator.[2]

The Anti-Monopoly Act of Japan permits the establishment of bank holding companies. In addition, pursuant to the FIEA, the Banking Act and the Insurance Business Act, Financial Instruments Business Operators, banks and insurance companies are permitted through subsidiary corporations to mutually enter each others' business areas, although the permitted scope of activities of such subsidiary Financial Instruments Business Operators is restricted to some extent. In addition, Registered Financial Institutions may act as intermediaries for and on behalf of the Financial Instruments Business Operator specified in advance.

In order to protect bank depositors, to prevent conflicting interests and to present fair competition, Financial Instruments Business Operators and Registered Financial Institutions must comply with various regulations under the FIEA such as establishment of the firewalls, and compliance with arm's-length rule.[3] Moreover, Type I Financial Instruments Business Operators and Registered Financial Institutions must also establish an internal system for managing conflicts of interest and properly manage customer's undisclosed information to protect the interests of their and their subsidiaries' customers.[4]

§ JP:59 Financial Instruments Exchange

The Financial Instruments Exchange is an organization in the form of a membership association or joint stock corporation with a license (menkyo) granted by the Prime Minister under the FIEA for the purpose of establishing a market for the purchasing and selling of securities and derivative transactions (referred to under the FIEA as the "Financial Instruments Exchange Market").[1] A membership cooperation is a juridical person whose membership consists of securities companies and foreign securities companies.[2] There are at present six licensed Financial Instruments Exchanges.

The Financial Instruments Exchange must establish the rules governing the business (gyomu kitei) of financial instruments trading on the Financial Instruments Exchange Market established by it and the brokerage agreement standards (jutaku keiyaku junsoku).[3] These rules and standards, as well as the articles of incorporation thereof, are subject to the examination of the Prime Minister when granting a license, and also subject to validation (ninka) thereof upon subsequent changes.[4] The Financial Instruments Exchange must also establish the listing rules in accordance with their gyomu kitei.[5] In addition, the Financial Instruments Exchange also has the power to exercise disciplinary measures over its members, which operations may be entrusted to the Self-Disciplinary Organization upon validation

§ JP:60 Financial Instruments Firms Association

As a self regulatory organization the FIEA provides for the establishment of the Validated Financial Instruments Firms Associations and Accredited Financial Instruments Firms Associations. These associations are established by the Financial Instruments Business Operators and the Registered Financial Institutions with the validation (ninka) of the Prime Minister (in the case of a Validated Financial Instruments Firms Association) or the accreditation (nintei) of the Commissioner of the Financial Services Agency (in the case of an Accredited Financial Instruments Firms Association).[1] The Japan Securities Dealers Association is currently the sole Validated Financial Instruments Firms Association. There are currently four Accredited Financial Instruments Firms Association such as The Investment Trusts Association, Japan and The Financial Futures Association of Japan.

Validated Financial Instruments Firms Associations and Accredited Financial Instruments Firms Associations are self regulatory organizations and as such establish various rules for the purposes of preventing unfair dealings and promoting the credibility of securities trading. A Validated Financial Instruments Firms Association may also establish the over-the-counter (OTC) securities market.[2] Validated Financial Instruments Firms Associations and Accredited Financial Instruments Firms Associations are charged with the duty of administering the registration of securities representatives.[3] They also handle the disputes arising from financial instruments or derivative transactions and conduct mediation (assen) in any such dispute.[4] These associations are subject to the supervision of the Commissioner of the Financial Services Agency (partly by the Securities and Exchange Surveillance Commission).[5]

The Investors Protection Fund is a juridical person created under the FIEA with at least 20 Financial Instruments Business Operators as its members with the validation (ninka) of the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance.[1] Every Type I Financial Instruments Business Operator must become a member of at least one Investors Protection Fund.[2]

When a Financial Instruments Business Operator faces financial difficulties rendering it difficult for such company to smoothly repay customers' assets to its customers, the Fund will repay money upon the customers' demand to the customers (other than QIIs and other investors specified in the Cabinet Order) on behalf of the distressed Financial Instruments Business Operator.[3] The customer assets subject to the protection of the Fund are provided by the law and regulations.[4] The maximum amount to be paid to each customer by the fund is limited currently to ¥10,000,000.[5] Other detailed provisions are made in the FIEA and Cabinet Ordinance.[6]

§ JP:62 Financial Instruments Clearing Organization

As a clearing house, the FIEA provides for the establishment of the Financial Instruments Clearing Organization, which provides the services to assume the obligations of the Financial Instruments Business Operators, Registered Financial Institutions and Securities Finance Companies that arise from the sale and purchase of securities, derivative transactions or othertransactions specified by a Cabinet Order (Financial Instruments Obligation Assumption Services).[1] It must be established as a joint stock corporation licensed by the Prime Minister.[2] The Financial Instruments Exchange may also provide Financial Instruments Obligation Assumption Services by obtaining approval (shonin) from the Prime Minister.[3]

XII. REGULATION IN THE SECONDARY MARKET

§ JP:63 Dealing and Brokerage Transactions

The FIEA provides that in order for a member and qualified participant of a Financial Instruments Exchange to accept commissions for trading in securities and derivative transactions in the Financial Instruments Exchange Market, such commissions must be consistent with the brokerage agreement standards (jutaku keiyaku junshoku) established by the Exchange.[1] Each Financial Instruments Exchange provides in its brokerage agreement standards the terms that each of its members must comply with in accepting and executing customers' orders in compliance with the FIEA.[2] The brokerage agreement standards are subject to the examination and validation (ninka) of the Prime Minister.[3] Thus, customers' orders must be accepted and executed in accordance with such standards.

Criminal penalties are provided in the FIEA in relation to the violation of regulations on large volume holding reports.[5] In addition, an administrative monetary penalty is imposed on the violator.[6]

§ JP:65 Tender Offer

If a person intends to obtain a controlling interest in a listed company, the purchase by such person of the shares of the listed company is often made outside the Financial Instruments Exchange Market. the Financial Instruments Exchange Market must be made by "tender offer" if such acquisition meets certain criteria.[1] A "tender offer" is defined as an offer to make purchases of shares from many unspecified persons or solicitations of offers to make sales of shares by such persons through public notice and making such purchases outside the Financial Instruments Exchange Market from such persons.[2] While the criteria for the purchases that are subject to the tender offer rules are very technical and complicated, the general concept is that: (1) the purchases of shares made outside the Financial Instruments Exchange Market result in the holding of more than 5% of the total issued shares (excluding the purchases made from no more than 10 persons during a 60 day-period); (2) the purchases of shares made (i) outside the Financial Instruments Exchange Market or (ii) on the Financial Instruments Exchange Market by means other than the auction method results in the holding of more than one-third of the total issued shares; (3) the purchases and/or subscription of shares exceeds 10% of the total issued shares during a six month-period, the purchase of share made (i) outside the Financial Instruments Exchange Market or (ii) in the Financial Instruments Exchange Market otherwise than by auction method exceed 5% of the total issued shares and the resulting shareholding is more than one-third of the total issued shares; or (4) the purchases of shares made during a tender offer initiated by another party exceed 5% of the total issued shares and the resulting total shareholding ratio is more than one-third of the total issued shares.[3]

In order to conduct a tender offer, the person making the tender offer must make a "public notice concerning commencement of tender offer" setting out the purpose of the offer, the purchase price, the number of shares intended to be purchased, the period ("tender offer period") during which the purchase is to be made and other matters prescribed by the Tender Offer Ordinance.[4] Copies of the public notice must be sent to the Financial Instruments Exchange(s) or Financial Instruments Firms Association and the issuer of the target shares.[5] On the day of the public notice, the person making the tender offer must file with the Prime Minister a "tender offer registration statement" containing information prescribed by the Tender Offer Ordinance.[6] The tender offer period is required to be a period from 20 business days to 60 business days. The equal purchase price applies to each shareholder responding to the tender offer.[7] As a general rule, if the purchaser aims to acquire more than two-thirds of the total issued shares after the tender offer, such purchaser must offer to purchase all shares in the tender offer.[8]

The person making the tender offer must prepare a "tender offer explanatory statement" (kokai kaitsuke setsumeisho) in accordance with the Tender Offer Ordinance.[9] The person making the tender offer must deliver the tender offer explanatory statement to the responding shareholders prior to or at the same time as the purchase.[10]

The target company must file with the Prime Minister an "opinion report" regarding the tender offer and send a copy thereof to the person making the tender offer.[11] Such opinion report is made available for public inspection by the Prime Minister. The opinion report may include inquires to the person making the tender offer and a request to extend the tender offer period if the initial period is less than 30 business days. If the opinion report includes such inquiries or request, the person making the tender offer must respond to the inquires within 5 business days or extend the tender offer period to 30 business days.[12]

The person making the tender offer may not purchase the shares of the target company during the tender offer period otherwise than by way of the tender offer, with certain exceptions, the violation of which is subject to the special civil liability.[13]

The person who has made the tender offer is required to make a public notice and file with the Prime Minister the tender offer report on the next day following the last day of the tender offer period, both of which describe the results of the tender offer in accordance with the Tender Offer Ordinance.[14]

Various civil and criminal penalties are provided in the FIEA in relation to tender offers.[15] In addition, an administrative monetary penalty is imposed on the violator.[16] insiders (and tippees) having knowledge of undisclosed material information on the issuer of the relevant listed securities.[1] Similar restrictions are also applicable to transactions relating to OTC registered shares.

The persons subject to the prohibition are: (1) officers, agents, employees of the issuer and its parent corporation and subsidiary corporations (the "issuer, etc."); (2) the holders of 3%[2] or more of the shares of the issuer, etc., and if such shareholder is a corporation, its officers, agents and employees; (3) any person who has a statutory power over the issuer, etc. (such as government officials who have the statutory power to investigate the issuer, etc.); and (4) any person who has entered or negotiates to enter into an agreement with the issuer, etc., and if such person is a corporation, its officers, agents and employees (a "corporate insider").[3] If any of the corporate insiders has come to possess any "material fact" (juyo jijitsu) relating to the operation, business or assets of the issuer or its subsidiaries, such person is prohibited from engaging in the purchase, sale or any other disposition or transfer of such securities, or derivative transactions with respect to such securities before such fact is "disclosed to the public".[4] A tippee who receives directly from any corporate insider any material fact and certain related persons belonging to the same entity as a tippee are also subject to the same prohibitions.[5]

The material facts subject to the insider regulations include: (a) the decision by the issuer on important corporate matters (such as issuance of shares, reduction of capital, stock split, dividend of surplus, share exchange/transfer, merger, company split and transfer of business[6]), (b) the occurrence of a material event (such as a natural disaster, change in major shareholders and de-listing[7]), (c) material change in business performance,[8] and (d) any other matter of importance with respect to the business, operation or assets of the issuer that might have a material impact on the investment decision of investors.[9] Certain events with respect to the issuer's subsidiaries are also included in the material facts. The insider trading prohibition applies until the relevant material fact is disclosed to the public. The material fact is deemed to be disclosed to the public when: (1) the issuer or its subsidiary has disclosed such information to at least two mass media sources (newspaper publisher, news agency or broadcaster) and 12 hours have passed; (2) a SRS, securities report, quarterly report or extraordinary report, or other similar statutory disclosure documents that contain such information is made for public inspection; or (3) in the case of a tender offer, a tender offer registration statement or tender offer withdrawal statement is made for public inspection or the public notice or announcement concerning commencement or withdrawal of the tender offer is published.[12]

Violation of the insider rule is subject to criminal penalty.[13] In addition, an administrative monetary penalty is imposed on the violator.[14]

§ JP:67 Regulation on Short Swing Transactions

The FIEA requires officers or holders of 10% or more of the shares of a listed corporation (including an issuer of OTC registered securities) to pay to the corporation upon its demand any profit gained by such officers or holders from buying/selling and selling/buying of the securities subject to the insider regulation made during the previous 6 months.[1] If the corporation does not make such demand, any shareholder of the corporation may institute an action on behalf of the corporation for the payment to the corporation of such profit.[2] In order to ensure the compliance with the short swing regulation as set forth above, Article 163 of the FIEA requires officers and holders of 10% or more of the shares of a listed corporation to file a report with the Prime Minister whenever they conduct a purchase or sale of the securities subject to the insider regulation or certain other similar transaction no later than the 15th day of the month following the month during which such transaction was conducted.[3] The Prime Minister, upon recognizing, from the above report, that a profit has been realized, shall send the listed corporation a copy of the report that shows

A similar regulation relating to both returning profits and reporting shall generally apply if such shares exceeding 10% in the aggregate are held as the assets of a partnership or other similar entity.[5]

§ JP:68 Regulation on Manipulation and Other Unfair Acts

Article 157 of the FIEA contains a provision similar to Section 10b of the United States Securities Exchange Act of 1934 and Rule 10b-5 thereunder. Although this provision is considered to be the basic prohibition on unfair dealing and activities in relation to securities, because of the generality of the provision, this provision has never been invoked as the basis of criminal sanction.

Article 158 of the FIEA prohibits the circulation of false rumors or the use of deceptive schemes, etc. in connection with securities or derivative transactions. Violation of this provision is subject to a criminal sanction and administrative monetary penalty.[1]

Article 159 of the FIEA prohibits "market manipulation" in the transactions of the listed securities or derivative transaction related to listed financial products or financial index. The law prohibits the following activities if they are purported to mislead a third party with respect to the situation of the transactions: (1) false sale/purchase of securities or derivative transactions involving no transfer of title, (2) false derivative transactions involving no delivery of cash, (3) transactions in collusion with the counterparty or a third party, and (4) entrustment or accepting entrustment of the foregoing activities. The law also prohibits the following activities if they are purported to induce others to conduct securities dealing or derivative transactions: (5) conducting a series of securities transactions or derivative transactions, or their entrustment that would mislead a third party into believing that there is active dealing in such securities or that cause market fluctuations, (6) circulating a rumor to the effect that the market will fluctuate on its own or due to another party's operation or intentionally making a false or misleading representation in making securities transactions or derivative transactions, and (7) conducting a series of securities transactions or derivative transactions or their entrustment for the purpose of pegging, fixing or stabilizing the market in contravention of the Cabinet Order.[2] Violation of the prohibi-

Short selling of securities in contravention to the provision of the Cabinet Order is also prohibited.[4]

§ JP:69 Stabilization

The FIEA Ordinance provides for the exceptional situation where "stabilization" of the market is permitted.[1] While stabilization transactions are permitted for the purpose of smoothing a Public Offering of Securities or Secondary Distribution of Securities, they must be conducted strictly in accordance with the rules and regulations.[2] The persons who are permitted to engage in stabilization transactions, the period during which such transactions are permitted, the prices at which such transactions may be conducted, and various reporting requirements, are provided in the Cabinet Order and Cabinet Ordinance.[3]

XIII. SECURITIES INVESTMENT TRUST AND INVESTMENT CORPORATION

§ JP:70 Securities Investment Trust

Japanese securities regulations recognize a "securities investment trust" as one of the collective investment vehicles. The Act on Investment Trusts and Investment Corporations (IT & ICA) defines a securities investment trust as a trust created for the purpose of investing the trust assets principally in securities on the direction of the person establishing the trust (the management company), the beneficial interest of which is equally divided and is subscribed by investors.[1] Any creation of a trust under which the assets are invested principally in securities other than securities investment trusts are prohibited.[2]

(1) When the Prime Minister discovers that a Securities Registration Statement contains a false statement on important matters, lacks a statement on important matters that should be stated, or lacks a statement on a material fact that is necessary for avoiding misunderstanding, the Minister may at any time order the person submitting the Securities Registration Statement to submit an amendment, and when finding it necessary, the Minister may order the suspension of the effect of the notification made pursuant to the provisions of Article 4, paragraphs (1) to (3). In this case, a hearing shall be held irrespective of the categories of procedures for stating opinions pursuant to the provisions of Article 13, paragraph (1) of the Administrative Procedure Act.

I. OVERVIEW OF LEGAL SYSTEM AND SECURITIES REGULATORY SYSTEM

§ KR:1 Korea's Civil Law System

The Republic of Korea (South Korea) is a civil law country. Its legal system was heavily influenced by the law of Ming Dynasty of China in Korea's Yi Dynasty (1392-1910).[1] Confucian philosophy is still an important aspect of Korean society and culture, which helps and influences the establishment of the legal norm.[2] During the period of "forced annexation of Korea by Japan" between 1910 and 1945, Korea was in effect ruled by the Japanese legal system.[3] Notwithstanding the existence of different opinions as to whether the introduction and reform of the Japanese legal system into Korea was used as a tool by the Japanese government to extend its control over Korea, or to rescue and promote national development, the Japanese legal system continued to have a influence even after Korea became an independent country recognized by the United Nation in 1948.

The modern Korean legal system since the First Republic has demonstrated influences from the European and Japanese law in the civil and criminal law field. Additionally, the Anglo-American law also influenced Korea in the area of "individual rights" and financial laws.[4] According to a Korean scholar, the traditional Korean legal system, which existed until the 19th century, ceased to be applied in the modern legal system except for some area of family law.[5]

Statutory law is the primary source of law in South Korea.[6] The Constitution of the Republic of Korea is the highest law of the nation and was promulgated on July 12, 1948. Korean laws are enacted by the National Assembly, which is the legislative branch in Korea. Although the legislature is an independent government branch, it is not immune from the influence of the ruling political party as well as the executive branch. Until very recently, the law-making process demonstrated the "loyalty" of the ruling-party-controlled legislature to the President of South Korea.[7] Another phenomenon is that the executive department of the government is heavily involved in the process of legislation. In most cases, legislation was initiated by the executive branch. The function of the legislature was not limited to but usually involved the approval or disapproval of bills drafted by the executive department. It is important to mention the Korea Legislation Research Institute (KLRI), established in 1990, an NGO where 80% of the budget is funded by the government.[8] The KLRI's major mission is to help the government conduct research to formulate national policy in all kinds of legislation.

Korea incorporates many concepts from the US Constitution, such as "separation of powers," "the presidential system," "judicial independence," but the structure of the court system continues to be similar to the Japanese style.[9] The modern judicial system was established in 1895 when the first edition of Court Organization Act was enacted, modeled after the German Court Organization Act.[10] The current Korean court system was basically established according to the Court Organization Act enacted on September 26, 1949. The judicial system comprises a three-level court system, including one Supreme Court, which is the highest level of court in Korea, three appellate courts, and several district courts. Each district court and appellate court has its own territorial jurisdiction. Trials and judgments are conducted and rendered solely by a single judge in the district court level and by multiple judges in some cases at the district court level and in most cases at the appellate court level. In the past, the trial was conducted without the participation of jury. However, the jury system was introduced into Korea in 2007.[11] The jury trial was implemented during 2008 and 2012 on a trial or temporary basis on certain criminal cases.[12] Korea will assess the jury system in 2012 and decide whether to implement it permanently.

Disputes relating to securities law issues were rarely brought to courts prior to the Asian financial crisis that occurred in 1997. The Korea encountered financial crisis at the end of 1997. Korea accepted financial support from the International Monetary Fund (IMF) in 1998, and its regulatory framework on the financial industry has been influenced by the IMF. The amendment to securities regulation was part of the financial reform plan. The financial regulators were consolidated in 1998 by establishing the Financial Supervisory Commission (renamed as Financial Services Commission in 2008) and the Financial Supervisory Service in 1999. Securities regulation was integrated into other laws related to the capital market when the Parliament passed the Financial Investment Services and Capital Market in 2007 and became effective in 2009. These will be discussed in more detailed in following sections.

§ KR:2 History and Development of Korea's Securities Regulatory System

The first modern securities transactions in Korea can be traced back to 1948 when Korean government issued the Farmland Compensation Bonds and the Kunkuk Government Bonds.[1] A formal stock exchange did not exist until the establishment of the Daehan Stock Exchange on February 11, 1956. Trading on the Daehan Stock Exchange began on March 3, 1956. At its inception, there were only 12 listed companies. Trading in listed stocks was very sparse. Trading activities were concentrated on government bonds at that time.

To promote the First Five-year Economic Development Plan (1962–1966), the Securities and Exchange Act (KSEA) was enacted in January 1962 to activate the market so that the government could finance funds for the economic plan through the securities market.[2] The Stock Exchange was reorganized into a joint-stock corporation in 1962. After the reorganization of the Stock Exchange, trading on the stock market became very active. Nevertheless, owing to speculative trading activities and a series of settlement defaults, the market soon crashed and was closed for 57 days.[3]

In order to prevent these mistakes from occurring again, stricter regulation was imposed in the amendment of the KSEA in April 1963. The Daehan Stock Exchange was accordingly reorganized into a government-run, non-profit corporation and was renamed the Korea Stock Exchange (KSE) on May 3, 1963. Notwithstanding the government's efforts to save the stock market, the market remained very inactive and most companies were therefore unable to finance their needs from the stock market and were forced to borrow money from banks or other sources such as the curb market—the underground financial market which normally charges higher interest rates for borrowing.

Since then, the Korean government has made several measures to revive the market as well as to enhance its soundness. The following principal measures were introduced: (1) The enactment of the Law on Fostering the Capital Market in November 1968 to increase the number of the listed companies; (2) The establishment of the Korea Investment Corporation in December 1968 to activate the primary market; (3) The issuance of the Presidential Emergency Decree for Economic Stability and Growth, and the enactment of the Public Corporation Inducement Law in 1972, which were designed to help corporations finance themselves at a lower cost via issuing equities instead of private loans; (4) The issuance of the Presidential Special Instruction to the Cabinet in 1974 to attract private companies to go public; (5) The establishment of the Korea Investment Trust Company in 1974 to manage investment funds, allowing individual investors to use professionals to handle their investment, which henceforth brought more investment trust companies into the market.[4]

In 1976, the KSEA was overhauled to enhance the supervision of the securities industry and provide investor protection. Flowing from the 1976 securities law amendment, the watchdog of the securities market, the Securities and Exchange Commission (KSEC) and the Securities Supervisory Board (KSSB) were established in February 1977. The KSEC and the KSSB, under the supervision of the Ministry of Finance (MOF), have since become the official regulators of the securities industry.[5] The MOF was later merged with the Economic Planning Board to become the Ministry of Finance and Economy (MOFE) in 1994.

In 1981, Korea introduced a plan to internationalize the Korean stock market. The internationalization plan can roughly be divided into three stages. The first stage was from 1981 to 1988. Several major activities were observed during this stage. Foreign capital was introduced into the Korean securities market via international investment trusts and Korean country funds. Moreover, companies were allowed to issue overseas convertible bonds, bonds with warrants, and global depositary receipts in 1985. The second stage was from 1989 to 1992 during which time the scope of indirect investment was expanded. The third country fund, Korea Asia Fund was established in 1990 to attract Asian capital to invest in Korean stocks. In the same year, Matching Funds were created to invest in both domestic and foreign markets. Qualified foreign securities firms were, in 1991, allowed to conduct securities business in Korea in the form of branch activities or by creating a joint-venture company. These foreign securities firms have been allowed to apply for membership on the Korea Stock Exchange since June 1991.[6] Jardine Fleming joined the KSE on February 27, 1995 and became the first foreign member of the KSE. The final stage to fully open the stock market began on January 3, 1992 when foreign investors were initially permitted to invest directly in the Korean stock market.

The Korean bond market was opened to foreign investors in July 1994. However, the bond market has not been very active. In May 1996, foreign companies were allowed to issue and list their securities on the KSE. From the above historical development of Korean securities market, there is a trend for the Korean securities market to internationalize a moderate and gradual pace.

In late 1997, Korea encountered the most severe financial crisis in its history. Both public and private sectors had accumulated huge foreign debt which placed Korea's financial system in a critical and fragile situation. Many financial institutions were forced to close and many companies, including some big business conglomerates called Chaebols, went bankrupt. The Korean currency depreciated more than 100 percent in less than one month. From the figures released by the IMF and Korean government on December 30, 1997, Korea's total external debt reached US$156.9 billion at the end of November 1997. The short-term external debt amounted US$92.2 billion, which was 58.76 percent of total external debt at the end of November 1997. Because of the accumulation of huge external debt, Korea was technically in default to repay its debt. Korea was forced to request help from the International Monetary Fund (IMF). In this financial crisis, the IMF along with other international organizations and Korea's neighboring countries put together more than US$65 billion in an emergency rescue fund to help Korea restructure its financial system and rebuild its economy. As part of the IMF rescue package, Korea was obligated to restructure its financial system, close troubled financial institutions, open its market to foreigners, and comply with many other conditions. Korea has partially implemented several policies, such as wider opening its securities market to foreigners. The Korea Futures Exchange was opened and began operation in April 1999.

The securities and futures market in Korea, formerly operated by three different institutions, were consolidated into the Korea

Exchange (KRX) in January 2005. The KRX was created through the integration of the Korea Stock Exchange, Korea Futures Exchange and KOSDAQ Stock Market according to the Korea Stock & Futures Exchange Act.[7] Currently, these three different markets are operated as three divisions of the KRX.[8] The purpose of the Korea Exchange, as stated in the Financial Investment and Capital Markets Act is, "to fix and stabilize fair prices in transactions of securities and exchange-traded derivatives as well as to facilitate the stability and efficiency of other transactions."[9] The KRX is a stock company with a capital of not less than 100 billion won and has its office located in Busan Metropolitan City and may establish other branches.[10]

The Financial Investment Services and Capital Markets Act also assigns the following duties to the Exchange: 1) Establishment and operation of the securities market, the KOSDAQ and the derivatives market; 2) Transactions of securities and exchange-traded derivatives; 3) Transaction confirmation, debt acquisition, deduction, confirmation of settlement securities, and other settlement matters; 4) Delivery of items subsequent to transactions of exchange-traded derivatives and the payment of money; 5) Listing of securities; 6) Deciding types of transactions of exchange-traded derivatives and items thereof; 7) Report and disclosure of a listed corporation; 8) Surveillance of abnormalities in trading prescribed by Presidential Decree, including fluctuation of prices or volumes of securities or exchange-traded derivatives, and the investigation of members; 9) Auction of securities; 10) Self-resolution of disputes arising from transactions in the securities market, the KOSDAQ and the derivatives market; 11) Duties incidental to the establishment of the securities market, the KOSDAQ and the derivatives market; 12) Other duties assigned by the Act as well as other duties prescribed by the articles of incorporation.[11]

§ KR:4 Financial Regulatory Reform After Asian Financial Crisis of 1997; Consolidation of Financial Regulators into the Financial Services Commission (FSC) in 1998

The first set of securities regulation in Korea was the Securities and Exchange Act, which was the major source of the securities laws in Korea prior to the enactment of the Capital Market Act.[1] Similar to the securities laws of Japan and Taiwan, the KSEA was heavily influenced by U.S. securities regulation. In addition, because of a close geographic and economic relationship, Japanese securities law also had a strong influence on the KSEA. The KSEA includes provisions governing both the primary and secondary market. However, the KSEA sets forth only general principles. It is supplemented with Presidential Decrees and the Ministry of Finance and Economy Regulations (MOFE Regulations), which are promulgated under the authorization of the KSEA. In addition to the Presidential Decrees and the MOFE regulations, rules and regulations promulgated by the Korean Securities and Exchange Commission (KSEC) and Securities Supervisory Board (KSSB) also help enforce the provisions of the KSEA. This regulatory framework was changed after the Korean financial crisis in late 1997.

The first major change after 1997 was to consolidate financial regulators. Based on the recommendation of the Presidential Committee on Financial Reform, the National Assembly, on December 29, 1997, enacted the Act for the Establishment of Financial Supervisory Organizations, legislation enabling the consolidation of competent authorities in the financial and securities markets.[2] The then existing four financial regulators, including the Office of Banking Supervision, the Securities Supervisory Board (KSSB), the Insurance Supervisory Board, and the Non-bank Supervisory Authority, were consolidated. Under the new financial regulatory framework, all financial institutions, including banks, securities companies, insurance companies, non-bank and other financial institutions are subject to supervision of a single regulator, namely the Financial Supervisory Commission (FSC), which was established in April 1998.[3] The FSC's executive arm, the Financial Supervisory Service (FSS), was established in

[1]Korea Securities and Exchange Act (KSEA) was enacted on January 15, 1962 (Act No. 972), wholly amended by Act No. 2920 on Dec. 22, 1976, and last amended by Act No. 8985 on Mar. 21, 2008. The KSEA was later integrated into the Capital Market Act enacted in 2007 and came into effect in February 2009.

[2]The Korean Government established the Presidential Committee on Financial Reform in early 1997, aiming to reform the financial regulatory framework. A draft bill titled "the Act for the Establishment of Financial Supervisory Organizations" was sent to the National Assembly on August 23, 1997, and this bill turned into law in December 1997.

January 1999 to help the FSC.[4] The function of the former 4 financial regulators, including the Office of Bank Supervision, the Securities Supervisory Board, the Insurance Supervisory Board, the Non-bank Supervisory Authority, were officially consolidated into the FSS.

With regard to the supervision of the securities market, the Securities and Futures Commission (SFC) was established under the FSC to investigate misconduct in the securities market to ensure the fairness and integrity of the market.[5] The Financial Supervisory Commission was restructured and renamed as Financial Services Commission in 2008 according to the Act for the Establishment of Financial Services Commission enacted in February 2008.[6] The purpose for creating (or renaming) the Financial Services Commission is to integrate the financial policy function of the Ministry of Finance and Economy and the financial market supervisory function of the Financial Supervisory Commission.

The former Securities and Exchange Act contains 215 articles which are divided into 12 chapters.[7] On January 21, 2000, the KSEA was overhauled again to accommodate regulatory reform after the 1997 financial crisis. Chapter I contains general provisions that declare the purpose of the KSEA and define terms which are used in the statute. Chapter II requires that certain types of corporations should be registered with the KSEC. Chapter III imposes registration requirements on making public offering of new issues or outstanding securities. Tender offers for securities are regulated under Chapter IV. Chapter V sets forth licensing and other rules on securities businesses, including brokerage, dealing, underwriting. Chapter V-2 regulates investment advisory business. Chapter VI governs the operation and supervision of the Korea Stock Exchange. Chapter VII, regarding the Securities and Exchange Commission and the Securities Supervisory Board, was deleted.[8] Chapter VIII governs other securities-related organizations, such as securities finance corporations, securities dealers associations, clearing corporations, brokerage firms and transfer agents. Chapter IX comprises provisions regarding control of listed companies. Chapters X and XI are supplementary rules and penal provisions. Although the KSEA does not exist anymore, the above information provides a general picture of securities law in Korea before the Capital Market Act.

[7]The KSEA was overhauled in 1976. Major amendments are stated as follows:

1. The establishment of the KSEC and KSSB.
2. The securities business licenses were divided into broker, dealer and underwriter categories. Securities firms may apply to operate different securities services on the basis of their paid-in capital.

§ KR:5 Securities and Exchange Act (KSEA) was Consolidated into the Financial Investment Services and Capital Market Act in 2007

In addition to the consolidation of financial regulators, another major change after 1997 was the consolidation of the laws related to the capital market. After the Asian financial crisis of 1997, financial regulatory reform has become a major task of the Korean government aiming to stabilize the financial market and to improve the efficiency and transparency of the market. These efforts were further pursued with the enactment of the latest Financial Investment Services and Capital Markets Act in August 2007 (Capital Market Act) which became effective in February 2009.[1] This Act consolidates several pieces of legislation that formerly regulated the Korean capital market, including the Securities and Exchange Act, the Futures Trading Act, the Trust Business Act, the Merchant Banks Act, the Indirect Investment Assets Management Business Act, and the Korea Securities and Futures Exchange Act.[2] The Capital Market Act's stated purpose is to "contribute to the development of the national economy by facilitating financial innovation and fair competition in the capital market, protecting investors, fostering the development of the financial investment business, and heightening the fairness, reliability, and efficiency of the capital market."[3]

§ KR:6 Presidential Decrees and FSC/FSS Regulations

The President of the Republic of Korea has the power to issue decrees to implement the laws and policies. To implement the Capital Market Act, the Enforcement Decree of the Capital Market Act was promulgated.[1] The Presidential Decree can be amended from time to time by another Presidential Decree. The purpose of the Enforcement Decree of the Capital Market Act is to enforce and carry out the mission authorized by the Capital Market Act.[2] There are several other important Presidential Decrees relevant to the capital market and these decrees can be further amended by presidential decrees. For example:

[2]To accommodate the implementation of the Capital Market Act, the Enforcement Decree repealed 6 subordinated presidential decrees, including (1) The Enforcement Decree of the Securities and Exchange Act; (2) The Enforcement Decree of the Futures Trading Act; (3) The Enforcement Decree of the Indirect Investment Asset Management Business Act; (4) The Enforcement Decree of the Trust Business Act; (5) The Enforcement Decree of the Merchant Banks Act; (6) The Enforcement Decree of the Korea Securities and Futures Exchange Act. (2) Enforcement Decree of the Act on External Audit of Stock Companies.[4]
(3) Enforcement Decree of the Certified Public Accountant Act.[5]
(4) Enforcement Decree of the Registration of Bonds and Debentures Act.[6]
(5) Enforcement Decree of the Asset-Backed Securitization Act.[7]
(6) Enforcement Decree of the Act on Real Name Financial Transactions and Confidentiality.[8]

In addition to the Presidential Decrees, the FSC and FSS are delegated powers to promulgate rules and regulations to administer and enforce the laws relevant to the capital market and other sections of financial markets. For example, with the delegation of powers from the Capital Market Act and the Presidential Decree, the FSC promulgated the "Enforcement Rule of the Financial Investment Services and Capital Markets Act" (Capital Market Act Enforcement Rule) to implement the Capital Market Act.[9]

The provisions of the Capital Market Act are enforced with the supplemented rules of the Presidential Decree and the Prime Minister Ordinance. In order to offer equity securities to the public, it is required to register with the Financial Services Commission.[10] Article 119 (1) of the Capital Market Act requires that a securities offering with size reaching or exceeding "the amount prescribed by Presidential Decree" shall file a registration statement with the Financial Services Commission. Article 120 (1), subparagraph 1 of the Capital Market Act Enforcement Decree sets forth that if "the aggregate value of securities . . . reaches or exceeds one billion won," a registration statement must be filed with the FSC. According to Article 120 (1) of the Capital Market Act, the registration shall become effective on the

§ KR:7 Commercial Act 1962

The Commercial Act, enacted in 1962, regulates commercial transactions, such as sales, partnership and agency; companies, insurance, and maritime commerce.[1] The Commercial Act is related to the regulation of securities market because Part III of the Commercial Act is called the Company Law which sets forth provisions regarding corporate governance, the formation of corporate capital and issuance of securities.[2] The Company Law comprises provisions regarding various types of companies. Among the four types of companies covered by the Commercial Act, only Chusik-Hoesa, a business corporation or share companies, can issue stocks and corporate bonds.

In Korea, incorporation of a company is regulated by the Commercial Act. A business corporation's capital divided by shares can be incorporated in one of the following methods: one is "Fa-Chi Sher-Li" (Promotive Incorporation), and the other is the "Mu-Chi Sher-Li" (Subscriptive Incorporation).[3] To form a business corporation, there must be at least three persons as promoters.[4] The promoters shall prepare, sign, and seal the articles of incorporation which shall include the object, the trade name, the total number of the shares authorized to be issued by the company, the amount of each share, the total number of the shares authorized to be issued at the time of incorporation, the location of the principal office, the manner in which the company is to give its public notices, and the full name and permanent residence of each promoter.[5] The total number of the shares authorized to be issued at the time of incorporation are required to be at least one-fourth of the total number of the shares authorized to be issued by the corporation.[6] If the total number of shares to be issued at the time of incorporation are fully subscribed by the promoters, it is called "Promotive Incorporation." However, if the promoters do not subscribe the total number of shares in the first issue at the time of incorporation, the remaining shares may be offered to the public, which is so called "Subscriptive Incorporation." The latter method is more popular because the law gives more leeway for incorporation by means of offering. For the former type of incorporation, the law has stricter restrictions.

A company must register with the Registrar Department of the Court when it incorporates and when it changes its capital structure or by-laws or articles of incorporation. In practice, the Registrar does not do a merit review of the registration.[7] It is routine work. Although investors can obtain basic corporate information from the Registrar, the registration process has become a formality and the Registrar does not check on the merit of the registrant to determine whether to permit establishment of the company. The registration of incorporation with the Registrar is not designed to protect the investors.

The mission to protect investors is embraced in the Capital Market Act. If a company intends to make a public offering, the Capital Market Act requires the issuer to register with the Financial Services Commission (FSC) when issuing shares to the public exceeding a certain amount prescribed by the FSC.[8] Under the Capital Market Act, the FSC does not have the power to make a merit review of the application for public offering.[9] The competent authority can deny an application if it thinks the company's shares are not suitable for public investment.

With regard to the par value of the stock, the Commercial Act allows a corporation to determine whether to issue par value shares or no par value shares.[10] However, the company has to choose to issue either par value shares or no par value shares. When issuing no par value shares, the board of director must determine the amount of the paid-in capital out of the total issuing amount.[11] When issuing par value shares, the issuance price cannot be set below the par value.[12] However, a listed company may issue shares at a price below the par value if approved by the shareholders' meeting.[13]

ing the protection of minority shareholders' rights. Major changes include the following:

1. Minority shareholders who hold more than three percent of the outstanding shares have a right to propose an agenda to be discussed in the shareholders' meeting.[14]
2. From July 1999, unless prohibited by the articles of incorporation, minority shareholders with more than three percent of the outstanding shares may request to elect directors by cumulative voting.
3. In a merger transaction, the merger plan normally must be approved by the shareholders' meeting of both companies. However, if the merger is on a small scale that does not materially affect the operation or the shareholders' benefits of the acquiring company, such merger plan is exempt from the approval from the shareholders' meeting of the acquiring company. In the acquiring company, only approval from the board of directors is required. It needs only the approval from the merged company.
4. A corporate transaction similar to spin-offs or split-offs is introduced as part of the plan to amend the corporate reorganization or restructuring mechanism.
5. A corporation may issue dividends twice a year.

§ KR:8 Capital Market Promotion Law of 1968 (CMPL)[1]

The Capital Market Promotion Law of 1968 (CMPL) is one of the earliest pieces of law that promotes the securities market. The CMPL was largely amended in November 1987 to include important provisions of the Public Corporation Inducement Law.[2] One of the important measures provided by the CMPL is that the KSEC may recommend companies to go public, which is called "designated public offering."[3] This allows the KSEC to select large capital sized companies to go public to promote the domestic capital market and allow investors more investing opportunities. In addition, the CMPL also entitles the employees of a company the right to subscribe up to twenty percent of the offered shares if the company makes a public offering.[4] As stated, one of the major purposes of the CMPL is to encourage or designate companies to go public. Because there have been adequate number of public companies, there is no longer need to designate companies to go public. As a result, the KSEC no longer has such power to designate companies to go public. The CMPL was therefore repealed. Part of the provisions of the CMPL were incorporated into the 12th amendment of the KSEA in 1997.

The consolidation of the financial supervisory system of Korea in 1997 helped provide intensive restructuring of the financial industry to put the financial system back on track after the Asian financial crisis of 1997. Based on a series of recommendations by the International Monetary Fund as well as the Korean government's Presidential Committee on Financial Reform, the government of Korea passed a bill in December 1997 to consolidate the four main supervisory bodies—the Banking Supervisory Authority, Securities Supervisory Board, Insurance Supervisory Board, and the Non-bank Deposit Insurance Corporation- into one integrated financial supervisory body. In 1998, the FSC (Financial Supervisory Commission) was established as Korea's top financial regulator. It was later renamed Financial Services Commission (by which name it is called today); it also took over the policy-making authority from the Finance Ministry. In January 1999, the Financial Supervisory Service (FSS) was also established. The FSS is directed by the FSC.

The FSS (Financial Supervisory Service) is the executive supervisor for the FSC, and works to carry out the examination of financial institutions, enforcement and other oversight activities as directed by the FSC. The purpose of the Financial Supervisory Service is to contribute to the growth of the national economy by 1) promoting the advancement of the financial industry and the stability of financial markets; 2) establishing sound credit order and fair financial transaction practices; and 3) protecting financial consumers, such as depositors. (Article 1, Act on the Establishment, etc. of Financial Services Commission).[5] company must be in the form of joint-stock company with a minimum capital of 30 billion Won (US$30 million).[2] The Financial Supervisory Commission is the competent authority to license and supervise the securities investment trust business. With more investment trust companies entering the stock market, the infusion of the capital from these companies has increased liquidity and efficiency in the stock market. It also provides small investors more opportunities to choose professional portfolio managers to handle their investment.

Previously, Korea explicitly prohibited foreign companies from selling investment trusts to Korean investors.[3] The reason for the prohibition was to protect the immature domestic investment trust industry.[4] With an effort to consolidate the "fragmented financial sector" and attract experienced and qualified foreign investment trust companies, reform packages were introduced in 1995 to restructure the investment trust industry.[5] In the domestic part, the reform made securities companies eligible to enter into the investment trust business while existing investment trust companies were allowed to convert into a securities company.[6] Financial institutions were eligible to enter into brokerage and investment trust business in the form of a joint venture.[7]

With regard to foreign fund management companies, foreign investors were allowed to hold a stake in Korea's domestic investment trust business beginning on December 1, 1996.[8] Under the reform package, total foreign ownership may not exceed 49 percent of an investment trust company's capital in the first two years and may expand to own 100 percent. A single investor can own up to 30 percent of the equity in an investment trust company. In order to hold a large stake in a Korean investment trust company, a foreign fund management company must have engaged in the investment business for more than ten years and have assets of more than 14 trillion won (US$14 billion). As the KSITBA was overhauled in December 1995, effective on December 1, 1996, a foreign investment management company may also establish an office in Korea which can be upgraded into a branch after one year. The 1995 amendment of the KSITBA allows foreign investment fund management company to set up a branch or business office with permission from the MOFE.[9] The KSITBA was last amended in January 2000.

The regulation of securities investment business is now incorporated into the Capital Market Act. The Capital Market Act has dramatically changed the regulatory philosophy of the financial market not by the types of institutions but by the function of the institution. It defines the "financial investment business" to include six types of business, including (1) Investment trading business; (2) Investment brokerage business; (3) Collective investment business; (4) Investment advisory business; (5) Discretionary investment business; and (6) Trust business.[10] To operate financial investment business, the entity must register or be authorized to engage the financial investment business.[11]

A new invention in the Capital Market Act is the distinction of ordinary investors from professional investors. However, a professional investor may give a notice to the financial investment business entity that he or she wants to be treated as an ordinary investor and the entity must consent to such notice.[12]

§ KR:10 Foreign Exchange Transactions Act (FOREX Act) and Foreign Investment Promotion Act (FIPA)

Foreign exchange control is another concern for both local and foreign investors to move capital inward and outward of the market. The foreign exchange control also affects local people and local firms in the movement of their capital inward and outward of the country. The Korean government has set a plan to liberalize its foreign exchange market. Currently, foreign exchange transactions are governed by the Foreign Exchange Transactions Act[1] and the Enforcement Decree of the Foreign Exchange Transactions Act.

In the foreign exchange liberalization plan, the first phase, beginning in April 1999, converted regulations on capital account transactions into a negative system, lifting most restrictions. The MOFE launched the second phase in January 2001 and this provides a more liberal foreign exchange system.

Foreign direct investment is regulated under the FIPA and the Foreign Exchange Transactions Act.[2] The FIPA is the first and still the most important law regulating foreign investment and the introduction of foreign capital into Korea. Foreign investors may apply for direct investment by means of acquiring newly issued shares, or outstanding shares of a Korean company. They may also conduct direct investment via merger with a Korean company. In order to make foreign direct investment, foreign investors must obtain prior approval from the Ministry of Knowledge Economy (MOKE). The MOKE when giving its authorization, shall consult with the relevant competent authority.[3]

Although the FIPA is designed to liberalize foreign investment policy and promote foreign investment, there are certain restrictions. The general restrictions are set forth in Article 2 (4) of the FIPA.[4] Generally, the current policy toward foreign investment in Korea is to make advance report to the Ministry of Finance and Economic (MOFE). The MOFE establishes the Foreign Investment Commission to deal with foreign investment policy and other relevant matters.[5] However, to invest in defense industry companies, the foreigner must obtain permission from the Minister of Commerce, Industry and Energy.[6] In order to provide protection to foreign investors, Korea Trade and Investment Promotion Agency established the Foreign Investment Support Center.[7]

II. ORGANIZATIONS INVOLVED IN SECURITIES REGULATION

A. OVERVIEW

§ KR:11 National Securities Regulators and Self-Regulatory Organizations

The securities laws are administered by two tiers of regulatory bodies. The first tier is the competent authority of the securities industry, the, i.e., national securities regulators. Before the establishment of the Financial Supervisory Commission (FSC), the competent authorities were the Ministry of Finance and Economy (MOFE), the Securities and Exchange Commission (KSEC) and the Securities Supervisory Board (KSSB). This structure was changed to accommodate the need for financial reform after the financial crisis in late 1997. The functions of the KSEC and the KSSB were consolidated into a new government agency, the FSC, under which the Securities and Futures Commission (KSFC) and the Financial Supervisory Service (KFSS) were created. In 2008, the MOFE and the Ministry of Planning and Budget (MPB) merged into the Ministry of Strategy and Finance (MOSF) which is currently Korea's sole fiscal policy-making government agency. The financial policy regarding the financial market was transferred to the Financial Services Commission (formerly the Financial Supervisory Commission).

The second tier regulators are self-regulatory organizations, including the Korea Exchange (KRX) (discussed above), Korea Securities Dealers Association (KSDA), Assets Management Association of Korea, Korea Futures Association, and Korea Financial Investment Association and the Korea Financial Investment Association, which was created for "the purposes of maintaining business practice between members, assuring fair trade, protecting investors, and promoting the sound development of financial investment services."[1] Rules of the second-tier self-regulatory bodies must be approved by the competent authority.

B. PUBLIC SECURITIES MARKET

§ KR:12 Market Climate

As of the end of April 2002, the total population of 15 years and over in the South Korea was 38.76 million.[1] The population reached

50 million on June 23, 2012.[2] The economically active population was estimated 24.97 million in February 2013 according to Statistics Korea.[3] The unemployment rate had always been kept between 3.2 percent and 2.3 percent prior to the 1997 financial crisis. However, the low unemployment rate increased to 6.8 percent in 1998 because of the financial crisis at the end of 1997. As of May 2002, jobless persons were around 661,000 or around 2.9 percent. Affected by the financial crisis, many companies, including some big business conglomerates, became insolvent. Also, under the prescription of the International Monetary Fund, which provided more than US$60 billion of rescue funds to help Korea solve its financial crisis, further layoffs were inevitable. Traditionally, layoffs were not common in Korea. In fact, it is almost impossible to lay off an employee in Korea. However, in order to stimulate the economy, on February 6, 1998, the Tripartite Commission, composed of the representatives from labor groups, business groups and the government, reached an agreement which allowed layoffs in emergent business conditions of a company or in the case of business combinations such as mergers and acquisitions.[4] This was the reason the unemployment rate increased in the first couple of years after the 1997 financial crisis. The unemployment rate increased again after the global financial crisis in 2008. The unemployment rate reached 3.9 in June 2009 and 4% in February 2013 respectively.[5]

Korea's gross national income (GNI) per capital was US$8,900 at the end of 2001. Gross domestic product (GDP) grew to US$504.58 billion as of the end of 2001 compared to US$357.51 billion in 1998. It grew to US$1,049.24 billion in 2007 and back off to US$834.06 owing to the global financial crisis. The GDP was US$1,116.25 billion in 2011.[6] Korea's gross national savings were 31.825% of the GDP in 2011.[7] Foreign currency reserves reached US$109.6 billion at the end of May 2002 from US$74 billion in 1999.[8] The amount of foreign currency reserves reached US$316.43 billion in February 2013.[9] Korea, similar to Taiwan, is an export-oriented country, whose economy has been growing rapidly since the 1990s because of the rapid growth of its exports. Korea kept an average real growth rate of 7.6 percent during the period from 1985 to 1995. The average inflation rate during the same period was 6.8 percent. Thanks to the steady growth rate and moderate inflation rate coupled with a series of reforms in the securities industry during the last decade, the stock market has become one of the most popular sources for corporations to raise capital to accommodate their future development. The GDP growth rate was minus 5.7 (–5.7%) in 1998 owing to the Asian financial crisis. Korea had moderate GDP growth rates between 2002 to 2012 except for 2008 and 2009 as influenced by the global financial crisis. (See TABLE Korea-1).

Although the stock market has become a popular source of corporate finance, many Korean companies still rely heavily on bank loans in addition to raising funds from the public. Two reasons explain why companies rely heavily on bank loans. The first reason is the government's long-term economic policy to promote exports that has been implemented for more than twenty years. Under this economic plan, exporting companies can obtain low-interest loans. It is necessary to note that until now, most Korean banks operate under the direction of the government or are heavily influenced by government policies, including interest rates and whether to extend loans to certain type of companies. This is how the government can plan and implement economic policies. The second reason is that the parent-subsidiary guarantee system enables many companies to obtain bank loans easily. A company can easily obtain bank loans if its parent or affiliate companies provide a guarantee to the bank. This system has been abused by many companies and has caused many bad loan problems. It even caused some Chaebols, such as KIA to become insolvent. Because of over use of bank loans, many Korean companies became highly leveraged. Many companies went bankrupt in 1996 and 1997. Statistics show that the number of bankrupt companies in 1997 was equal to 10 percent of the listed companies of the KSE.

The market capitalizations of the KOSPI and KOSDAQ stock markets were KR Won 1,042 trillion and KR Won 106 trillion respectively at the end of 2011. (TABLE Korea-2)

Initial fears that foreigners moved into Korea stock market would make a quick kill has been proved to be groundless. The financial authorities conceded that market opening has had a very beneficial impact on the local market. "We found that the financial authorities were very quick to amend the regulations where necessary," said Philip Smiley, managing director of Jardine Fleming in Seoul. Kim Chong-Tae, Happy Bulls, KOREA ECONOMIC REPORT, January 1994, vol. 9, no. 1, at 31. Since the opening of the Seoul bourse in January 1992, foreigners' net equity capital amounted to US$5.4 billion in 1993, showing a 160% increase from the previous year. Their net purchase totaled 4.1 trillion won (US$4.1 billion). The flood of foreign money represents 5.3% of the market capitalization, which does not include foreign equity holdings in foreign-invested companies. Foreigners' investment in offshore funds established by Korean investment and trust companies amounts to about US$1 billion. Id. at 32. Foreign acquisition amounts to 8.5% of the total shares listed on the Korea Stock Exchange. Such a percentage is in 1993 totaled 169,918 billion Won (US$ 169.92 billion), up from 90,624 billion Won in 1992. The daily average trading amount was 574,048 million Won (US$574.05 million).[14] The total trading value reached the all-time high of 229,772 billion Won in 1994 and decreased to 162,281 billion Won in 1997. The change in the trading value matches the trend of KOSPI stock index which climbed to a high of 1,027 point in 1994 from 678 point in 1992 and declined to 376 point at the end of 1997, the record low since 1988. In 2011, the trading value of KOSPI Market was 1,702,060 billion Won; the average daily trading value was 6,863 billion Won; and the trading volume was 87,732 million shares in 2011. The trading value of KOSDAQ Market was 588,007 billion Won; the average daily trading value was 2,250 billion Won; and the trading volume was 134,765 million shares.[15]

§ KR:13 Primary Market; Issuer Transactions—Equity Market

Common shares are the most popular type of equity issued by Korean companies. Although the Commercial Act grants companies rights to determine whether to issue par value shares or non-par value shares, listed companies' shares are required to have a par value of 5,000 Won or more.[1] In Korea, new shares are issued mainly because of a need for additional capital or for issuing stock dividends. Capital may be increased with or without consideration. Capital increase with consideration is the regular way that companies issue new shares to obtain new funds for the company to expand business, to maintain operation, or pay off high interest debt financing. In contrast, there is no cash infusion in the case of capital increase without consideration. The typical example of capital increase without consideration is the transfer of reserve fund into stated capital. New shares are issued without cash payment in the following situations: (i) transfer of capital surplus, (ii) transfer of earned surplus, (iii) revaluation surplus to capital stock.[2] In addition, if new shares are issued to pay dividend to shareholders, the company's capital is not increased even relatively higher than in Japan, which is fully open to foreign investors. Still, foreign ownership in Japanese stocks is as low as 6% of the total. Although the economy had not fully recovered, the average prices of stocks jumped more than 50% due to decreased interest rate in 1993 which shows that stock market performance and the economy are not always co-related. Id.

[1]Korea Commercial Act, art. 329(4). All listed shares currently have a par value of 5,000 Won.

[2]A company is required to set aside at least 10% of "dividend amount of profit" as earned surplus reserve at each period until the earned surplus reserve reaches 50% of the stated capital. Korea Commercial Act, art. 458. A company shall set aside the following amount as capital surplus reserve: (i) when the shares have issued above the face value, the amount exceeding the face value; (ii) in the case of capital and no cash is infused into the company.[3] When a company issues new shares for the purpose of transferring funds from the reserve fund into capital, or for the payment of dividend, the shares are issued to the existing shareholders in the proportion to the number of shares they own.

Public offerings were not popular in Korea in the past. Korean companies rely more heavily on bank financing than equity offerings. Most public offerings are initial public offerings (IPOs) or a means to privatize government-owned businesses. There was an increasing number of public offerings in the past decade because of increasing number of companies going public. Except in the case of going public, companies prefer rights offerings to public offerings when issuing new shares to increase capital. In 1980s to 1990s, public offerings have been used frequently in the privatization of state-run enterprises. 1988 and 1989 had the most IPO cases. There were 112 companies going public, raising 1,049 billion Won (US$1.05 billion), in 1988, and 126 companies going public, raising 3,051 billion Won (US$3.05 billion), in 1989, (TABLE Korea-3). The public offerings and the stock market have since cooled down. In 1992, only 8 companies went public raising 81,680 million Won (US$81.68 million) from the public, (TABLE Korea-3). The number of companies went public was increased to 40 during 1996, raising 1,391 billion Won. During 1997 and 1999, 41 went public and were listed on the KSE. Since 2000, the KSE has not admitted any new companies. From 2000 to April 2001, 191 companies went public and were listed on the KOSDAQ market raising more than 2,650 billion Won.

For the KOSPI stock market, there were 784 listed companies at the end of 2012 compared with 791 at the end of 2011. The total number of shares listed on the KOSPI Market were around 35,823

Korea Commercial Act, art. 459. Korea Commercial Act, art. 461.

[3]The Commercial Act provides that a company can issue stock dividend up to 50 percent of the total announced dividend. Korea Commercial Act, art. 462-2(1). That is to say, according to Commercial Act, when a company announces a dividend, it must distribute at least 50 percent of the announced dividend in cash. million shares.[4] As for KOSDAQ, there were 1,005 listed companies at the end of 2012 compared with 1,031 at the end of 2011.[5]

It is important to note that Korea's OTC market restructured and set up KOSDAQ in 1997. Twenty-six companies went public in 1997, including 23 companies listed on the KSE and 3 companies listed on the KOSDAQ. In 1999, there were 116 IPO cases, including 15 KSE IPOs raising 1,720 billion Won, and 101 KASDAQ IPOs raising 2,103 billion Won. In the year 2000, there were 179 IPO cases raising 2,551 billion Won. All of these 179 companies were listed on the KOSDAQ. Because of the severe impact of the global financial crisis in 2008, the total number and amount of public offerings declined dramatically but began to recover from 2009. The total amount of IPOs and seasoned offerings of KRX Stock Market was 1,778.7 billion Won in 2008, compared with 12,005.2 billion Won in 2007. (See TABLE Korea-3)

§ KR:14 Primary Market; Issuer Transactions—Bond Market

The total balance of listed issues amounted to 224,116.59 billion Won (US$224.116 billion) (US$1=WON1000) as of the end of 1997 compared to 12,001 billion Won (US$12.001 billion) at the end of 1985, (TABLE Korea-4). The statistical number shows that public bonds, including Monetary Stabilization Bonds account for 61.6 percent of the total listed bonds at the end of 1997, (TABLE Korea-4). The balance are corporate bonds. The amount of listed bonds issued by companies has increased over the past 15 years. This indicates that companies have increased the use of corporate debt in addition to the offering of equity securities. In fact, the total value of outstanding listed corporate debts was three times of the total market value of listed stocks at the end of 1997.

The major players in the bond market are institutional investors.[1] Although more than 80 percent of bonds outstanding are listed on the KSE, most bond transactions take place in the KSDA OTC market. About 99 percent of bond trading volume occurred in the OTC market in 1992. Trading of small-lots of public bonds was centralized in the KSE in October 1995. In the meantime, Asian Development Bank's bonds denominated in Korean won were also listed on the KSE. A unique feature of the Korean bond market is that the term of maturity is very short. For example, in 1991, about 92.3 percent of debt issues have maturities less than three years.[2] Although the total value of listed corporate bonds is three times of the total market value of listed stocks at the end of 1997, the total trading value on listed stocks is 40 times more than the total trading value on corporate bonds in 1997.

The obstacles for developing the Korean debt securities market can be explained in the following manner.[3] First, the issuing prices of public bonds are normally controlled by the government. Although the Korean government has made efforts to introduce a market-driven distribution system in recent years, the government still controls the issuing prices of government bonds. Second, the investor base is very weak and the market lacks liquidity. Third, there is no real time quotation system for bond trading. Furthermore, the Korean bond market is not fully open to foreign investors for direct investment.[4] The government's major concern is that if the bond market is fully opened, Korea's high interest rate would attract inflows of huge amount of funds that could damage Korea's currency system.[5] In July, 1995, the MOFE liberalized the domestic debt market allowing companies to issue commercial paper with maturities over seven, ten, or thirteen years.[6]

In July 1994, foreigners were initially allowed to directly invest in non-guaranteed convertible bonds of small-and-medium-sized Korean companies. The aggregate and individual investment ceiling was set at 30 percent and 5 percent respectively. Additionally, in June 1997, foreigners were allowed to invest in Korean non-guaranteed long-term bonds issued by small-and-medium-sized companies and non-guaranteed convertible bonds issued by large listed companies. For foreign investment on non-guaranteed long-term bonds issued by small-and-medium-sized companies, there was an aggregate limit of 50 percent of the listed amount but no individual limit. The investment ceiling on non-guaranteed convertible bonds of listed companies was initially set at 30 percent and 6 percent for aggregate and individual investment limits. Because of the 1997 financial crisis, in order to attract foreign capital and ease the pressure of shortage of dollars, the investment ceiling on Korean government bonds as well as corporate bonds has totally been abolished. Currently, there is no limit on foreign investment in Korean bonds.

As of the end of 2012, there were 585 companies with total of 5560 issues of corporate bond listed on the KRX. The total amount of the listed bond was 330,885 billion won at the end of 2012. The trading value of the listed bond was 7,247.1 billion won in 2012.

§ KR:15 Secondary Market; Trading Transactions

The securities trading market in Korea can be divided into the exchange market and the over-the-counter (OTC) market. After a company goes public, its securities are normally listed on the Korea Stock Exchange (the KSE or the KOSPI Market) or traded on the Korea Securities Dealer Automated Quotations (KOSDAQ), the OTC market. The KSE, the KOSDAQ and the Korea Futures Exchange merged into the Korea Exchange (KRX) in January 2005 but continue to operate separately as divisions of the KRX.

C. KOREA STOCK EXCHANGE (KSE)

§ KR:16 Overview

The Korea Stock Exchange located in Yeouido-dong, Yeongdeungpo-gu, Seoul is the only securities exchange in Korea. It was established as a non-profit organization in February 1956. Similar to the New York Stock Exchange, the KSE adopts a membership system.[1] As of the end of 1997, the KSE had 38 securities firms as members (excluding Coryo Securities Corporation, which went bankrupt on December 5, 1997). The KSE has two subsidiaries which help the KSE to perform its functions. One is the Korea Securities Depositary Corporation (KSD) and the other is Korea Securities Computer Corporation (KOSCOM). There was a major reform in the Korea stock market in the early 2000s. The plan to consolidate the three market operators, i.e. the KSE, the KOSDAQ and the Korea Futures Exchange, was implemented in January 2005. Currently, these three markets operate under the roof of Korea Exchange (KRX).

§ KR:17 Features

The KSE provides two types of stock price indices. The first type is the Composite Stock Price Index (KOSPI), which is based on the market capitalization.[1] Before 1983, the KOSPI was calculated under the price-weighted method. The current method, which multiplies the market price of each stock with the number of shares listed on the KSE and then aggregates them, was adopted in 1983. KOREA STOCK

[1]The KSE has experienced three periods of structural change. When the stock exchange was first established in 1956 with the name of the "Daehan Stock Exchange," it was funded by joint contribution of banks, insurance companies and securities firms. EXCHANGE, 1994 FACT BOOK 16 (Apr. 1994) [hereinafter 1994 KSE FACT BOOK]. The KOSPI is announced every minute during the trading session. The second type is the Adjusted Stock Price Average (KASPA), which is a derivative of Dow Jones Average.

As of the end of May 2002, six hundred and sixty-nine companies were listed on the KSE, with a total market value of 309,158.8 billion Won.[2] These 669 listed companies had issued 852 different stocks with total of about 20,705 million shares listed on the KSE.[3] These listed stocks were owned by 1,467,785 persons, comprising various types of investors, including government bodies, financial institutions, securities companies, insurance companies, investment trust companies, individuals and foreigners, at the end of 1997.[4] As of the end of 2012, there were 784 companies listed on the KSE (KOSPI) with total market value of 1,154,294 billion Won.[5]

The KRX has the following product market: (1) the stock market; (2) the collective investment securities of ETF market; (3) the subscription warrant market; (4) the subscription right certificate market; (5) the ELW (Equity Linked Warrant) market; (6) the beneficiary certificate market; and the debt securities market.[6]

Trading in these listed securities may be suspended by the KSE when certain situations occur. For example, if a company or its securities meet any of the following conditions, the KSE may suspend the trading for a period of time:[7]

(1) when a listed company meets any of the delisting criteria, for example, fail to submit annual report, semi-annual report, quarter reports on time;[8]
(2) when forged or altered securities certificates of a company's securities are found in the market;
(3) when a listed company requests its shareholders to submit stock certificates for the purpose of a stock split; or
(4) when the KSE deems it necessary for the interest of the public and for the maintenance of an orderly market.

The KSE's automated trading system was brought into operation on March 3, 1988 after a four-year development beginning 1984.[9] The trading became fully computerized on September 1, 1997. In addition to stocks, bonds, and beneficial certificates, stock index futures became available on the KSE in May 1996. The KSE introduced stock index options in July 1997. A market for warrant trading was opened in July 2000. In January 2002, equity options market was launched by the KSE. In December 2005, the equity linked warrants (ELW) market was launched. In 2007, Korean market was further internationalized by listing foreign company and foreign ETF for the first time.[10]

§ KR:18 Trading Hours

The trading hours on the KSE are divided into a regular session and an off-hours sessions. Regular trading hours begin at 9:00 a.m. and end at 15:00 p.m., Monday through Friday. The stock and ETF markets have off-hours sessions, including the post-market trading session from 15:10 to 18:00 and pre-market trading session from 7:30 to 9:00.[1] In the after-hours trading, orders are executed at the closing price of the regular trading session. For block trades, bid and ask prices quoted in the off-hour trading session shall be in the price range of the regular session.[2] In the case a listed company selling its treasure shares in the off-hour sessions, the member shall place the quotation within five percent from the closing price.[3]

§ KR:19 Trading Procedure

In order to trade listed stocks, an investor must open an account with a brokerage firm or a financial investment business entity which is a member of the KRX.[1] Foreign investors first need to use their real name to register with the Financial Supervisory Service to obtain a registration card and take the card to open an account with the securities firm.

Before entering a buy order to the broker, the former KSE rules require an investor to make a "good-faith deposit" of a certain percentage of the value of buy order with the brokerage firm. The purpose of the good-faith deposit requirement is to prevent or reduce the risk of settlement default. The good-faith deposit is set at a rate higher than 30 percent of the specific transaction value.[2] The ratio of the deposit used to be 40 percent. In April 1998, the KSE Rules were amended to abolish the requirement. Instead, it became the risk of management and industry autonomy of the securities companies. Cur-

[1]The KSE promulgated the Entrustment Contract Rules to require its members to comply with the rules when they receive applications for opening an account or placing an order. rently, member firms of the KRX can autonomously decide the ratio and method of the deposit. The deposit can be in cash or securities. In the case of 40 percent deposit, if an investor wants to buy 100 shares of X company's shares at the price of 10,000 Won per share, the total proceeds for the proposed transaction is 1 million Won. The investor must deposit at least 400,000 Won or substitute securities to the brokerage firm before he can place a buy order. However, institutional investors such as banks, insurance companies and investment trust funds may be exempted from the deposit requirement.[3] After the money has been deposited, the investor can place an order with his brokerage firm. The member firms usually require retail customers to deposit 30% to 40% of the value of bid orders and require customers must have the security in order to enter sell order. However, brokerage firm may exempt the requirement to apply to institutional customers with high credibility.[4] If a customer is using substitute securities to fulfill the good faith deposit requirement, the following securities can be used: Stocks (including KDRs), ETFs, debt securities, beneficiary certificates.

In July 1975, Korea implemented full-scale book-entry delivery for securities transactions. In November 1987, the securities deposit system was codified into the Korean Securities and Exchange Act.[5] Currently, securities are deposited in the Korea Securities Depository and are immobilized. The transfer of securities is via book-entry system. When an investor places a sell order, the brokerage firm will check from its client's account whether he owns that securities.

After the investor's buy or sell order is accepted by the securities company, the order is then transmitted to the KRX. Only a member firm of the KRX is able to transfer the order into the KSE computer system.[6] If the securities company is not a member of the KRX, it must arrange with another KRX member firm to process the order.

[6]Securities firms that satisfy the minimum capital requirement may apply a license from the MOFE. As of the end of November 1994, there are 32 Korean securities firms and 8 branches of foreign securities companies. Securities firms with a license may apply for a membership in the KSE. There are two types of membership in the KSE. One is the regular membership which enjoys the voting right and properties of the KSE. Regular members pay the basic and special admission fees. All 32 Korean securities companies are regular members of the KSE. 1994 KSE FACT BOOK, at 51–52. The second type is annual membership which pays annual membership fee instead of basic admission fee for using the KSE facilities. Id. at 52. To increase the accessibility of foreign investors to the Korean stock market, the MOFE eased the rules for foreign securities firms in May 1995. South Korea Eases Rules for Foreign Securities Firms, ASIAN WALL ST. The order first goes to the KRX Trading System for validation. The KRX Trading system no longer checks the "good-faith deposit" where the old SOT system will check that because of the former KSE requirement.[7] For foreign investors, the order will need to by-pass the FSS (Financial Supervisory Service) Foreign Investors Management System for foreign investors' share-holding cap check on certain issues. After the order is checked and accepted by the SOT System, the order is then transmitted to the Stock Market Automatic Trading System (SMATS) where it is matched with an order from the other side.[8] There are no specialists or market makers in the KSE market. The buy order is executed only when its price is crossed with that of a sell order. When the order is executed, the SMATS creates a transaction report and sends it to the securities firms and the Stock Market Information System.[9]

§ KR:20 Order Handling and Execution

Before the introduction of after-hours trading on November 25, 1996, all orders entered into the KSE were limit orders. Buy orders and sell orders which are not immediately executed were stored in the limit order book under the SMATS by stock, price and time. Since September 2000, all transactions are handled electronically. Orders are matched via a computer assisted auction system. A buy order with the highest bid price will be matched with the sell order with the lowest ask price when the bid and ask prices cross. Moreover, the orders are matched according to two general rules: price priority and time priority. A buy order with higher bid price will be executed prior to other buy orders. If the bid price of two or more buy orders are the same, the order which is entered earlier has the priority for execution. If two orders are entered in the same time with the same limit price, the order of larger size has priority to be executed. How can two orders be entered in the same time? The KSE treats orders that are entered ties by regulators to establish new branches. Id. The capital requirement for establishing a branch has been reduced to 5 billion won (US$5 million) from 10 billion won for each sector of business the branch wants to engage. Id. For example, if the new branch applies for only brokerage business, it must have at least 5 billion won while it must have 15 billion won if it wants to operate brokerage, dealing and underwriting business. Foreign securities companies can also form a joint venture with Korean securities firms. For example, Salomon Brothers of the U.S. formed a joint venture in brokerage business with five Korean securities firms in July 1995, in which Salomon Brothers controlled 49% stake of the joint venture. Korea Gives Approval for Salomon Venture, ASIAN WALL ST. J. July 13, 1995, at 20.

[7]The former SOT System can automatically check whether the order contains required information (validation check) and whether the client has made deposit (deposit check). After the validation and deposit check, the SOT System sort the orders into groups by stock code. before the open of the each trading session and during the last ten minutes of one trading day's last trading session as entered in the same time. All orders entered into the KRX Trading System compete with one another.

On November 25, 1996, along with the introduction of the after-hours trading session, two new order forms were introduced by the KSE. In addition to the existing limit order, investors can now place market orders and limit-or-market-on-close orders. A market order will be executed at the most favorable current market price instantly. A limit-or-market-on-close order will be executed at the price limited by the investor. If it is not executed during trading hours, it will be executed at the market price when the market closes, i.e., the close price of that trading session. The introduction of market orders will increase the liquidity of the market though it might also increase the volatility of the market. In the after-hours trading session, orders are executed at the market-closing price. Large block orders are allowed to be executed within two ticks above or below the closing price.

Similar to Taiwan and Japan, the KSE employs limits on the daily price movement limit.[1] In order to prevent excessive price fluctuation, the KSE imposes daily price movement limits based on the previous trading day's closing price. The current limits are set at 15 percent, which means that the trading range cannot go above or below 15 percent of the prior day's closing price.[2]

§ KR:21 Margin Transaction

The margin transaction is to purchase or sell securities with credit extended by securities companies or other financial institutions permitted to extend credit in connection with securities transactions. Korea introduced margin trading in 1977. Margin trading was introduced to create temporary supply and demand of stocks and to stabilize the stock price.[1] The KSEA authorizes the securities companies and Korea Securities Finance Corporation to engage in money lending and securities lending business in connection with securities transactions.[2] The Scope of the securities finance business is now defined under Article 326 of the Capital Market Act.[3]

The supply of the stocks is temporarily increased when an investor

sells the stocks short, and the demand is temporarily increased when an investor purchases stock on credit. Normally, the demand and supply of stocks in the market depends on investors' buy and sell activities in cash. Before the introduction of margin trading, investors could purchase and sell stocks only with cash. After margin trading became available, the investors' buying power increased because they can use the borrowed credit to buy more stocks which would be unavailable without the margin trading system. The demand for stocks is therefore increased because of margin trading. By the same token, an investor can sell stocks he does not own by borrowing shares from the securities company. Without margin trading system, the investor could sell only the stocks he owns. The supply of stocks increases because investors can sell the borrowed securities. This additional supply would not exist if margin trading were not allowed.

The supply and demand of stocks from margin trading are temporary compared to the regular trading because those who sell stocks short need to buy the stocks back at some point to cover their short position, and those who take long position will sell the stocks to repay the margin loan. Unlike those who trade stocks on their cash account, those who trade stocks on margin are paying interest to trade securities. Therefore, no matter whether their transaction is profitable or not, margin traders are paying interest on the borrowed securities or credits before they cover their short position or pay back the margin loan. To avoid paying too much interest, margin traders normally look for short term investments. Therefore, margin trading only creates the temporary supply or demand of stocks because investors will not wait too long to buy back the stocks to cover their short position or sell the stocks to repay the margin loan.[4]

On the other hand, margin transactions are speculative to some extent and may have an adverse impact on the stock market if they involve large volume of margin buying or short selling. In order to prevent abusive use of the margin trading system and to prevent investors from borrowing too much credit without the ability to repay their borrowing or cover their position, the both former KSEC and now the FSC imposes margin requirements. In order to engage in margin transactions, investors are required to open a margin account with the securities firms and deposit a certain percentage of money into the margin account against the credit borrowed for the purchase or sale of the securities. If an investor wants to trade securities on margin, he is required to deposit as the "initial margin," a certain percentage of the transaction value, in his margin account of his broker-fer, offering, and accepting an offer; (2) to lend money or securities necessary for the transactions on the securities market and derivatives market through the Exchange, which is a clearing house under Article 378 (1); (3) to loan money by taking securities as collateral; and (4) other business approved by the Financial Services Commission. Capital Market Act § 326(1).

age firm. The margin may be in cash or marginable securities. The KSE also sets the minimum maintenance requirement which requires that margins must always be maintained at the same level as that of the initial margin, and the securities company which extends the credit has right to dispose the securities held as collateral when its customer cannot meet the margin call.[5] The initial margin requirement is currently set at minimum 40% of the transaction value; the margin level can be varied according to the decision of the KSEC.[6]

From the securities company's viewpoint, a securities company can extend credit for up to 150 percent of its shareholders' equity and loan securities for up to 50 percent of its shareholders' equity to its customers. The KSEC has limited the margin buy and short-selling so as not to exceed 20 percent and 10 percent of a listed company's outstanding shares respectively. The securities companies may obtain the cash from their customers' short sale transactions or securities from the margin-buy transactions as collateral. The value of the collateral from a customer must be maintained at or above 130 percent and up to the level between 160 percent and 170 percent of the total credits extended to that customer. The ratios are set by the individual securities company that extends credit. If the value of the collateral falls below 130 percent of the total extended credits, the securities company may make a margin call. When a margin call is made, the customer must make up the deficiency to bring the ratio above 130 percent. If a customer fails to respond to the margin call, the securities company may liquidate the collateral. Since 1990, short sales have been temporarily prohibited on the KSE.[7] Margin-buy trading was banned in 1988 and was reinstated in April 1995.[8] The initial margin requirements are between 50 percent and 60 percent of the trading value set by individual securities company.

According to the new regulatory regime, a securities finance company may engage one of the following businesses in addition to the securities finance business:[9]

1. Business prescribed by Presidential Decree among brokerage and dealing;
2. Trust service;

§ KR:22 Clearing and Settlement

For the stock market, the Korea Exchange acts as the clearing institution. The KRX performs "transaction confirmation, debt acquisition, deduction, confirmation of settlement securities, settlement item, and settlement amount, settlement execution guarantee, follow-up measures on settlement failure, or settlement instruction as a result of transactions on the securities market and the derivatives market."[1]

The settlement of securities transactions are now performed by the Korea Securities Depository (KSD), the only central securities depository (CSD) in Korea.[2] The KSD performs its major function to settle securities transactions executed on the KSE and on the OTC run by the Korea Securities Dealers Association.

At the heart of the CSD is the full operation of the securities deposit system. Under this system, the rights are transferred and the pledges are effected by means of book-entries.[3] The participants of the KSD, including securities firms, banks and other financial institutions, redeposit their clients' securities in the KSD. The KSD provides custody service of securities on a fungible basis. The clients may claim ownership of the deposited securities but they may not request the withdrawal of the same securities certificates they deposited.[4] The KSD is the sole nominal holder of the deposited securities. However, only the beneficial owners may exercise the shareholder's right.

The KSD provides also settlement services for transactions made on the Korea Stock Exchange and the OTC market. For KSE transactions, the KSE clears transactions and the KSD provides settlement services according to the agreement with the KSE. Settlement procedures include confirmation of trades, preparation of clearing data, delivery of settlement statements to pertinent parties, and settlement.[5] The KSE's computer system automatically determines the number of shares and the amount of funds netted out on a multilateral netting basis for compared trades.[6] In other words, by the settlement day, a securities company needs to deliver (or to wire of money) to the KSD only the amount of money of the total purchase (buy orders from its customers) deducting the total sale (sell orders from its customers). If amount of the total sale is larger than that of the total purchase, the securities company will receive credit. The transfer of securities is done via book entry. The settlement information, showing the quantity of securities and the amount of money to be received or delivered, will be sent out to each member of the KSE.

The settlement date for securities transactions in Korea is the second business day after the trading date (T+2).[7] The settlement is on a delivery-versus-payment (DVP) basis. After receiving clearing data from the KSE, the KSD verifies the balance of each participant and settles the trades by book-entry into the KSE's settlement account. In the mean time, the KSD transfers the money it received from the buying securities firms to the selling securities firms.[8]

D. OTC MARKET—KOSDAQ SYSTEM

§ KR:23 Overview

The OTC market was established on April 1, 1987 by the Korea Securities Dealers Association (KSDA).[1] The OTC market in Korea is for those securities that are not listed on the KSE. There are two types of companies whose shares may be registered and traded on the OTC market: Companies whose shares have been delisted from the KSE and companies that do not yet meet the listing requirement of the KSE were discussed earlier. Normally a company will first offer its shares on the OTC market before it seeks to list its shares on the KSE. Most companies registered with the KSDA are small and medium enterprises. Small and medium companies are traditionally handicapped in borrowing money from banks or raising fund from the stock market. In order to eliminate the difficulties in direct financing of small and medium-sized companies, it is important to boost the OTC market. The OTC market system was substantially restructured in February and July, 1988.[2] An electronic trading and information services, the KOSDAQ system, was launched by the KSDA on October 22, 1991 to improve the transparency of the OTC market.[3] In 1996, the KOSDAQ Securities Company was established to enhance the features and efficiency of the OTC market.

Generally speaking, securities which are not traded on a stock exchange are traded on the over-the-counter market. Unlike the NASDAQ in the U.S., many countries' OTC markets are still not organized and investors have difficulty to obtain information regarding the OTC market. There is no central place for the OTC market and the securities transactions that take place on the OTC market are not reported to one central agency or the medium.[4]

The situation in Korea is different. Since 1987, Korea has developed its OTC market into a more concentrated and organized market by the Korea Securities Dealers Association (KSDA). Only the shares of qualified companies registered with the KSDA are traded on the OTC market. The OTC market is regulated and supervised by the KSDA which is under the supervision of the KSEC and the MOFE. The KSDA has improved the OTC market by incorporating a registration system, a disclosure system and an electronic information services and trading system (KOSDAQ system) which was introduced on October 22, 1991.[5] All of these aspects distinguish the current Korean OTC market from the traditional sense of OTC market. The KOSDAQ Market consolidated with the Korea Stock Exchange and the Futures Exchange in 2004 and is now operating under the Korea Exchange.

§ KR:24 KOSDAQ Listed Securities; Listing Criteria

Stocks traded over the counter involve more risk than the listed stocks because these companies are smaller in size and have a shorter business history than those listed on the KSE. In order to minimize risk and for the purpose of investor protection, the KOSDAQ market has its own listing rules aside from the KSE Listing Requirements. Domestic companies intending to initially list or relist their shares on the KOSDAQ are required to submit application to the KRX for the eligibility screening review.[1] Foreign companies intending to list their shares or Korean Depository Receipts (KDRs) on the KOSDAQ must follow similar procedures.[2]

In order to be listed on the KOSDAQ, an applicant must meet the following listing criteria:

1. Capital Requirements

In terms of the business size, the applicant must have a minimum

KOSDAQ stocks can be traded at all securities firms. There are three different ways to transact the KOSDAQ stocks. First, the most popular way is to have the stocks executed through the KOSDAQ system. Second, the securities companies can serve as an agent to match the trades for their clients. Third, the securities companies can be a principal in the transaction and trade with their clients.

Trading via KOSDAQ system is divided into the regular session and Off-hour trading session. The regular session is from 9:00 to 15:00 but the auction-based block trading is from 9:00 to 14:30.[22] The off-hour session is further divided into the post-market trading session and pre-market trading session. The post-market trading session is from 15:10 to 18:00 and the pre-market trading session is from 7:30 to 9:00.[23]

E. INVESTORS AND MARKET PROFESSIONALS

§ KR:25 Overview

The major players in the KRX include institutional investors and individual investors. Institutional investors include government, investment trust companies, securities companies, privately placed fund, insurance companies, banks, merchant banks and pension funds.[1] Today, both domestic and foreign individual investors can investor in Korea stock market. On August 12, 1993, Korea implemented the Real-name Financial Transaction System (Real-name System).[2] Before the introduction of the Real-name System, many large shareholders used false or borrowed names to trade securities and take profit or to protect their managerial rights. Since the introduction of the Real-name System, investors must use only real names to engage all financial transactions.

In late 1990s, arbitrage trading was rare because only very few Korean stocks were listed in overseas stock exchanges. Using stock index futures to arbitrage stock investment is also not common partly because the KOSPI-200 stock index futures was introduced on May 3, 1996 and partly because there are many restrictions such as foreign investment ceiling in index futures.[3]

According to the statistics, there were 5.28 million persons investing in the KRX stock market, among them 4.37 million persons investing in KOSPI Market and 2.38 million persons investing in the KOSDAQ Market as of the end of 2011.[4] If we classify investors into different types of groups, the individual investor group constitutes 99% by the number of shareholders as of the end of 2011.[5] If calculated by shares owned by different type of investor group, individual investors own 48.44% of the KRX listed companies' shares (including KOSPI and KOSDAQ Markets) while foreign investors own 11.86% and "other corporations" own 25.61% of listed shares as of the end of 2011.[6] If calculated by market capitalization, individual investors own 24.4%, foreign investors own 30.6%, "other corporation" own 29.64%, and financial institutions (including banks, securities companies, insurance companies, assets management companies, pension funds, and merchant and mutual savings banks) own 12.97%.[7]

§ KR:26 Individual Investors

Individual investors are the majority players who dominate the Korean stock market. About 36.3% of KOSPI shares are owned by individual investors while 15.89% of KOSPI shares are owned by foreign investors. (See TABLE Korea-5) In the KOSDAQ Market, 68.17% of listed shares are owned by individual investors while foreign investors own only 5.32% of KOSDAQ shares. In terms of market capitalization, individual investors own 20.66% of KOSPI stocks, while foreigners own 32.91% and other corporations own 30.9%.

§ KR:27 Financial Institutions and Corporate Investors

Major players on the KSE are securities firms, financial trust companies, insurance companies, and banks. The investment decisions of these institutional investors are obviously influential on the movement of the market. However, institutional shareholding represents a relatively small portion of 35 percent of total market capitalization. Beginning in April 1995, investment trust companies have been permitted to invest up to 10 percent of their managed fund's capital in any single company's shares while securities companies have been permitted to invest up to 40 percent of their capital in other companies.[1] With the increase of investment trust funds in recent years, it is expected that institutional investors will play a more important role in the stock market.

§ KR:28 Foreign Investors

Before 1992, foreign investors could invest in Korean stock market only indirectly via overseas investment funds, such as the Korea Fund which is listed on the NYSE. Foreign investors were initially allowed to enter Korean market in January 1992. However, there has been a limit on foreign investment since the opening of the market to foreign investors. In January 1992, the ceiling of aggregate foreign shareholding in one Korean company was set at 10 percent; a single foreign investor can invest up to 3 percent of one company's share.[1] The ceiling for aggregate foreign ownership in a Korean company was raised to 20 percent on October 1, 1996 and was scheduled to be gradually raised to 29 percent in 1999 and was totally lifted in the year of 2000.[2] The government announced that there would be no limitation of foreign ownership by one individual or institutional investor from January 1997.[3] This foreign shareholding restriction was to be liberalized gradually as it is government policy to open Korea's financial market for foreign investors.[4]

However, because of the financial crisis at the end of 1997, the

[4]The foreign investment ceiling on Korean stocks was raised from 15% to 18% effective on Apr. 1, 1996 and is expected to be raised to 23 % by the end of 1997. South Korea Stock Ownership, ASIAN WALL ST. J., Feb. 26, 1996, at C18; Yoo Choon-sik, Seoul Unveils Steps to Open Wider Financial Sector, REUTERS FINANCIAL SERVICE, June 17, 1996, available in LEXIS, ASIAPC Library, KOREA File. The MOFE also an-

Korean government was forced to open its market to foreigners at a faster pace. In the stock market, the aggregate foreign investment ceiling on a single Korean company more than doubled from 26 percent in November to 55 percent in December, 1997. The individual foreign investment ceiling was increased from 6 percent in November to 50 percent in December, 1997. In terms of the investment in a public company, the aggregate foreign investment was raised from 18 percent in November to 25 percent in December, 1997, while the individual foreign investment ceiling was raised from 1 percent to 3 percent. The raising of the foreign investment ceiling allows foreign investors to invest more flexibly in arranging their investment portfolio and hopefully attract more foreign investment.

Foreign investors must first register with the KSSB before they can begin to trade Korean securities. According to the KSE statistics, as of the end of 1997, there were 6,541 foreigners registered with the KSSB. About 70 percent of the registered foreign investors are institutional investors. Among these institutional investors, 3,196 or 70 percent of the total foreign institutional investors were investment funds. The second largest number of foreign institutional investors were pension funds (471), followed by securities companies (250) and banks (243). If counting the registrants by their nationality, the biggest number of foreign investors come from the United States (2,364) followed by the United Kingdom (898), Japan (513) and Taiwan (509).

Foreign investors' demand for Korean stocks is often larger than supply. Because the foreign investment ceiling on many blue chip stocks has been reached, many foreign investors are not able to purchase the shares of those blue chip companies from the KSE. Because of the high demand on blue chip companies' shares, an unofficial OTC market was created for foreigners to trade Korean equity securities among themselves.[5] For the same stocks, the trading prices at this OTC market are usually higher than the stock prices at the KSE. Foreigners buying shares at this OTC market must pay a premium to the stock price at the KSE.[6] The investment ceiling was eased in 1997 when the Korean economy was in trouble. The foreign investment ceiling has been raised gradually since then. As a result, as of the end of 1997, only 9 out of the 950 total listed issues whose investment ceiling was reached. From the record, foreign investment in the Korean stock market, excluding the OTC trade, accounts about

1. Ministry of Finance and Economy (MOFE), the Securities and Exchange Commission (KSEC) and the Securities Supervisory Board (KSSB) before 1998

§ KR:29 Establishment of the Korea Stock Exchange (KSEC) and the Korea Securities Supervisory Board (KSSB)

Before 1976, the Ministry of Finance (now the Ministry of Finance and Economy), the Korea Stock Exchange and the Korea Investment Company (KIC) were the government agencies that regulated the securities market.[1] Because of the need to have a special organization in charge of the securities regulation, the Korea Stock Exchange (KSEC) and the Korea Securities Supervisory Board (KSSB) were created in February, 1977. The KSEC and the KSSB are under the control of the MOFE. The KSEC is the policy-making body. The KSSB, under the supervision of the KSEC, serves as the executive body to implement the KSEC's policies, and makes rules within its power delegated by the KSEA, the Presidential Decree, and the MOFE Regulations.[2]

§ KR:30 Organizational Structure and Functions of the KSEC and the KSSB

The KSEC is composed of nine commissioners with three being ex-officio commissioners, the Governor of the Bank of Korea, the Chairman and CEO of the Korea Stock Exchange, and the Vice Minister of Finance and Economy.[1] The other six commissioners are recommended by the MOFE and appointed by the President of the Republic of Korea for a term of three years.[2] If one commissioner is appointed to fill a vacancy prior to the expiration of the term of his predecessor, he shall serve for the remainder of such term only. The KSSB is composed of one Governor, one Deputy Governor, three Assistant Governors, sixteen divisions and six offices.[3] The KSSB does not have authorized capital.[4] The KSSB is the executive body of the KSEC. It carries out the policies and decisions of the KSEC, and supervises the primary and secondary market and securities-related entities under the direction of the KSEC.[5]

The KSEC and the KSSB's missions are as follows:[6]

§ KR:31 Relationship Between the Ministry of Finance and Economy (MOFE) and the Korea Stock Exchange (KSEC)

The MOFE is the highest authority in regulating and setting up the overall policies for the securities industry. Under the supervision of the MOFE, the KSEC and the KSSB were created by the KSEA in 1976 to regulate the securities market. The KSEC claims that it is an independent regulatory body. It is true that the KSEC has decision-making power in administering the securities laws. However, it is arguable whether the KSEC is truly an independent securities regulator. Some Korean scholars think that, unlike the Securities and Exchange Commission in the United States, the KSEC is not an independent securities regulator.[1] If we look into the KSEA, it also suggests that the KSEC is not a truly independent regulator because it is subject to the supervision of the MOFE.

[Section KR:31]

Under the KSEA, the KSEC must report all of its decisions to the MOFE.[2] The MOFE can repeal the decisions or suspend an action of the KSEC if the MOFE finds them illegal or inappropriate in terms of the public interest. The MOFE's securities regulation functions are carried out by its Securities Bureau. The Securities Bureau consists of a Securities Policy Division, Securities Issuance Division, Securities Administration and Audit Division and Money Market Division.[3] The Securities Bureau makes final decisions related to the following matters: (i) to establish major policies on securities with considerations of other financial institutions; (ii) to supervise and examine the KSEC, the KSSB and other securities institutions; (iii) to approve the appointments of major posts of the KSEC, the KSSB and other securities institutions; and (iv) to grant securities business.[4]

In reality, the KSEC and the KSSB make and implement policies in the area of securities regulation. Every resolution of the KSEC must be adopted by an affirmative vote of at least two-thirds of the commissioners present at a KSEC meeting, provided that they represent over two-thirds of the total number of the commissioners in office.[5] Although the KSEC has the power to regulate the securities industry, the KSEC must immediately report its actions to the MOFE and the MOFE reserves the right to repeal or modify the decision made by the KSEC or to order the KSEC to take any necessary measures if the MOFE finds that the resolution of the KSEC is "in violation of law or excessively unfair in the public interest or for the protection of investors."[6] However, although the MOFE has superior power over the KSEC, it is necessary to mention that in practice the MOFE gives the KSEC very high level of decision making power with much intervention.

§ KR:32 Political Culture of the MOFE and KSEC in Regulating the Stock Market

There are some articles discussing the modern bureaucracy in South Korea. However, no articles directly discuss Korea's political culture in regulating the securities market. A Korean scholar, Professor Chung-hyun Ro devoted one chapter of his book titled "[t]he Modern South Korean Bureaucratic Elite: Their Origin & Value System" to discuss the Korean bureaucracy.[1] In the discussion, Professor Ro indicates that the traditional bureaucracy is very conservative. For example, administrators overemphasize rituals and forms and forget practical factors. They emphasize the existing legal format rather than how to solve the problem. Most administrators are inclined to maintain the status quo without trying to suggest new ideas. The discussion of these problems can also be found in another study, in which the Korean author explains the cultural background of traditional bureaucracy and the obstacles to improve the administrative system.[2] The attitudes of Korean Bureaucrats are influenced by the mix of fatalism, authoritarianism, emotional humanism, ritualism, and anti-materialism.[3]

[2]See generally, WANKI PAIK, KOREAN ADMINISTRATIVE CULTURE (1990).

[3]"Fatalism" is one of the most traditional and widespread values shared among Korean people. The life of fatalism-oriented people is governed by "secret, latent, and extra-human forces" rather than "open, manifest, and predictable forces." WANKI PAIK, KOREAN ADMINISTRATIVE CULTURE, supra, at 22 (1990). A person who has the fatalistic attitude, no matter he is a leader or a follower, "lacks not only a fighting spirit to attack difficulties, but lacks also determination to pursue any goal persistently." WANKI PAIK, KOREAN ADMINISTRATIVE CULTURE, supra, at 29. These kinds of people usually rely on routine, regulations, or formulas to avoid new, unsettling problems and to preserve a comfortable, secure and bureaucratic nest. They are more oriented toward "Being" than toward "Doing." WANKI PAIK, KOREAN ADMINISTRATIVE CULTURE, supra note 135, at 30.

Dr. Paik defines "authoritarianism" as "a lack of toleration for different opinions of others, a willingness to dominate other people, and inclination to oppress junior classmates and younger people." Id. at 46. The authoritarianism is derived from the Confucian ideology that emphasizes superior and inferior relationships. Id. at 49. The characters of administrative behaviors derived from authoritarianism can be summarized as follows:

(1) There is absence of responsible government or administration for the common people. Government worker in Korean society were traditionally regarded as superior to the common people. Their power was not to be questioned by the common people. Id. at 51–52.

(2) The superior are not inclined to tolerate that his subordinate opposes his idea. People accept the idea of those above them in the power hierarchy and reject the opinions of their superior "ordinarily carries with it the weight of moral correctness simply by virtue of the superior's position. Id. at 52.

(3) Most of the decision are likely to be made at the top of the administrative hierarchy, and decision making is heavily influenced by the political philosophy and outlook of the decision-maker himself. Id. at 52.

(4) There is relatively little room for an incremental approach to solving problems. If the decision-maker has such black or white attitude, it increases the danger of arbitrary and dogmatic judgments, and an inclination either to accept or reject a policy totally. Id. at 54.

"Emotional Humanism" mainly focuses on keeping proper relations with other people. Id. at 57. Some anomalies may occur if administrative behaviors are derived from emotional humanism. It may reduce the rationality in decision making because the administrators are more emotional and intuitive in making decisions. Id. at 63. In addition, many important administrative matters such as promotion and the administrator's future are generally determined chiefly by how firm a relationship the bureaucrat is able to establish with his superiors. "Therefore, whether the subordinate likes his supervisors or not, he must try desperately to get along with them because their attitudes toward him greatly influence the destiny of his administrative career." Id. at 63.

"Ritualism" is defined as "the disposition of an individual to stick to traditional customs, precedents, rituals and ceremonies in order to maintain one's social status

Although the situation has been improved,[4] the old phenomenon still exists because the process for the transition is very slow. A survey of the incentives to become a civil servant shows that about 70 percent of civil servants come from urban areas with education of high school or better.[5] The urban raised young people seek wealth and good life. The survey shows that more than 80 percent of those surveyed persons value reputation and power as their primary motivation for entering the civil service. Dr. Paik indicated that the bureaucracy is still perceived by civil servants "as a means of climbing the ladder of power and prestige" rather than "furthering public service."[6]

The opinion that most people pursue power and reputation as the major motivation for entering the civil service was further substantiated by the author in the process of interviewing people in both the private and public sectors of the securities related institutions. However, from the author's observation, the problems associated with the traditional bureaucracy are less serious in the securities industry partly because the staff of the securities regulatory bodies has higher levels of education than other administrative departments of the Government. In addition, Korean government has adopted several measures to improve the administrative system, such as the implementation of "Real Name Financial Transaction System."[7] This system was introduced to reform the financial system as well as to prevent and dignity or in order to save face." Id. at 70. To abide by the forms and other external requirement is therefore very important to Korean people. The administrative behaviors derived from ritualism treat legal procedures as the most important among all considerations. Id. at 74. Administrators seem to believe that all problems can be solved by existing regulations or rules. Because they highly value the formality and legalistic views in their execution of administration, "the task of the administrative service becomes that of maintaining procedures, not solving problems and making decisions." Id. at 75.

"Anti-materialism" is defined as "the attitude that places more emphasis on spiritual values, such as honor, prestige, integrity and virtue, than on material values such as money, wealth, physical comforts and affluence." Id. 81–82. Administrators influenced by anti-materialism are likely to base their policy-making on sacred and subjective value premises instead of assessment of objective and factual premises. Id. at 86. Although anti-materialism to some extent helps to encourage good manner and prevent bad conduct especially from a moral point of view, it could produce an imbalanced human personality if one excessively emphasizes on moral behavior and ignores the importance of material needs for human being. Id. at 87.

The real-name system applies to all financial dealings including deposits, installment savings, checks, certificates of deposit (CD), securities and bonds. The following are some important measures under the real-name system. (1) All people having accounts at banks or other financial institutions must show proof of their real name. Withdrawal of money from any account will not be allowed without such proof; (2) Payment of principal on loans and withdrawals of less than one million won using cash cards are excluded from the above identification requirement; (3) Anyone caught violating or attempting to circumvent the real-name confirmation pro-corruption. Big shareholders are prohibited from using borrowed names and false names to make securities transactions which could create false image of active trading market and which are used to manipulate the market. This system will also prevent big shareholders from protecting their managerial rights. This system will also prevent government officers from using false names to create an account for the purpose of transferring a received bribe. Although the result of this system is still under observation, it does have some positive responses from society.[8]

The regulatory structure discussed in this section was

The maximum limit will be 15 million won for minors aged 15 or younger; (6) Up to 60% of the penalty will be levied on those converting aliases to real names after the two-month deadline; (7) For financial assets registered under aliases, the government will impose heavy penalties in the form of taxes amounting to 96.75% on interest and dividends earned; (8) Tax authorities will conduct a special tax probe on those withdrawing money exceeding 30 million won from financial institutions during the designated two-month period; (9) To protect the personal privacy of financial transactions, information about financial transactions will be made available only to those who hold court-issued writs or tax officials investigating financial transactions in accordance with the pertinent tax laws; (10) The information about financial transactions may be exchanged between financial institutions only when deemed necessary at the discretion of the Finance Ministry and the Office of Bank Supervision; (11) The demand for information about financial transactions, even if necessary, must be made by documents on a bank branch basis to prevent possible abuse of the information; (12) Those found in violation of the regulations could face up to three years in prison and a fine of 20 million won; (13) To avoid any after-effects of the implementation of the real-name accounting system, tax authorities will conduct an extensive probe into those suspected of real estate speculation to prevent money from flowing into such speculative areas as real estate. They will expand the districts subject to prior approval for land transaction or the areas designated by the Office of National Tax Administration, if necessary; (14) The government will keep a list of those who have sent more than US$3,000 overseas and also investigate those who own real estate overseas in a bid to keep money from flowing abroad by disguising it as commercial transactions or remittances by individuals; (15) The bank of Korea will form a special team to help small and medium-size firms that are expected to face difficulties in financing. The legal credit guarantee ceiling of the Korea Credit Guarantee Fund will be doubled; (16) As a means of stabilizing the stock market, the government will implement short-term measures to prop up stock prices such as expanded purchasing by institutional investors. changed because of the introduction of the Financial Supervisory Commission that replaces the previously existed financial regulators. Currently, the KSEC and KSSB have been abolished. The regulatory reform and regulatory structure led by the Financial Supervisory Commission will be discussed in § KR:33.

2. Regulatory Reform

§ KR:33 Creation of the Financial Supervisory Commission (FSC), Financial Supervisory Service (FSS) and the Securities and Futures Commission (SFC)

In the recent regulatory reform in the securities and financial markets, one of the most important measures was the merger of financial regulators into a single new regulatory agency, i.e., the Financial Supervisory Commission, under which an administrative arm, the Financial Supervisory Service was created to help the FSC conducting examination and relative administrative matters. In addition, the Securities and Futures Commission was also created under the supervision of the FSC.[1] The establishment of the SFC was designed to focus on the regulation and supervision of the securities and futures industry. The Financial Supervisory Commission was renamed to the Financial Services Commission in 2008 to accommodate the implementation of the Capital Market Act.

Under the current regulatory structure, the Ministry of Finance and Economy, which was formerly the highest government agency responsible for the financial regulatory policies, has transferred the financial policy-making function to the Financial Services Commission since 2008. The FSC is the competent authority for making rules and regulations on supervision of securities industry and other financial industries.

§ KR:34 Self-Regulatory Organizations (SROs)

The self-regulatory organizations, such as Korea Stock Exchange, Korea Securities Dealers Association, and Korea Securities Depository, are under close supervision of the MOFE and the FSC.

Outside observers such as Korea University Professor Lee Phil Sang, an outspoken critic of the system's progress, feel that the system has not yet reached the goals that were set for it. Id. Central to Lee's critique of the system is the fact that—although false names are now outlawed—many people are using borrowed or stolen names when conducting financial transactions. Real-Name System, Real Success?, KOREA ECON. REP, Sept. 1994, vol. 9, no. 9, at 25. The only way to stop this practice, Lee argues, is to introduce a global taxation system so that the real identities of the users of such accounts could be brought to light when taxes are levied. Real-Name System, Real Success?, KOREA ECON. REP, Sept. 1994, vol. 9, no. 9, at 25.

[1]The Act for the Establishment of the Financial Supervisory Organization was enacted on December 31, 1997 to integrate the supervisory authorities into the Financial Supervisory Commission.

§ KR:35 Korean Exchange (KRX)

The KRX was a consolidation of three market operators, including the Korea Stock Exchange, the KOSDAQ Market and the Korea Futures Exchange, who worked out the merger agreement in July 2004 and officially announced the next month. The KRX was officially established in January 2005 and began operation. The consolidation serves the purpose to efficiently manage and regulate the capital market under the same roof. In effect, three markets are now operating under the KRX but still run separately. However, the KRX can manage and review the operations continuously. The KRX has a general meeting of shareholders. The operation of the KRX is mainly by the Board of Directors. Under the current board structure, the board of directors is composed of 15 directors, including a Chairman, who is also the chief executive officer (CEO), a Chairman of the Market Oversight Commission, 5 standing directors and 8 outside directors (5 public directors and 3 directors representing the interest of members).[1] The Chairman of the KRX is produced through a very formal procedure which involved consideration of the expertise and experience in the industry and relationship with the government. The candidates of the CRX Chairman are nominated by the Officer Nomination Committee, upon the recommendation made by the Financial Services Commission following the resolution of the general shareholders' meeting and appointed by the President of the Republic of Korea.[2]

The major function of the KRX is to maintain a centralized marketplace for securities and futures trading, to regulate its member firms, and to list and administer securities. With regard to the stock market, the KRX maintains the separate operation of the KOSPI market run by the former KSE and the KOSDAQ market. There are separate sets of listing rules, and business regulations, and trading rules for the KOSPI market and the KOSDAQ market.

§ KR:36 Korea Financial Investment Association (KOFIA)

The Korean Securities Dealers Association (KSDA) was the only securities dealers association in Korea. The KSDA was established in 1953 as an SRO. Unlike the securities firms in Taiwan, in order to do securities business in Korea, securities firms are not required by law to join the KSDA. However, all securities firms have joined the KSDA. The disadvantage of not joining the KSDA is that without membership in the KSDA a firm cannot carry out certain securities activities in Korea.[1] As of October 1994, the KSDA had 40 Korean securities

The KSDA, the Asset Management Association of Korea, and Korea Futures Association were consolidated into a newly created Korea Financial Investment Association (KOFIA) in February 2009 to accommodate the implementation of the Capital Market Act.[3] The KOFIA is an important SRO to regulate the financial investment industry. It maintains a Self-regulation Committee to adopt and enforce the self-regulation. KOFIA also sets the guidelines in the financial investment industry, such as the standard of underwriting.[4] It also conducts preliminary reviews of the advertising of financial investment products and the business activities of financial investment firms.[5] To help solve disputes in the financial investment industry, the KOFIA operates dispute settlement center to arbitrate the disputes.

§ KR:37 Korea Securities Depository (KSD)

In 1974, the Korea Securities Settlement Corporation (KSSC), the predecessor of the Korea Securities Depository (KSD), was established to manage the settlement of stock transactions. One of the KSSC's important contribution was to introduce a beneficial owner system in 1987, which improved Korea's securities deposit and settlement system.[1] The KSSC's efforts to serve as the nation's central securities depository had been eroded because of its perceived status as a profit-seeking corporation and the lack of neutrality.[2]

The KSD was established on April 25, 1994 as a special public corporation to succeed the KSSC's business according to the 1993 KSEA amendment.[3] The primary function of the KSD was to promote the orderly circulation of securities by receiving collective deposits of securities from its participants, making book-entry deliveries among

Upon the legislation of the Capital Market Act, the KSD was appointed as the settlement organization for the KOSPI and KOSDAQ stock markets.[5] The operation of the KSD is under the supervision of the Financial Services Commission.

B. DEFINITION OF SECURITIES

§ KR:38 KSEA Definition of Securities (Prior to Capital Market Act)

In Korea, securities were defined to include the following items:

(1) government bonds;
(2) municipal bonds;
(3) bonds issued by a corporation organized under special legislation;
(4) corporate bonds;
(5) certificates of contribution issued by a corporation organized under special legislation;
(6) stock certificates or instruments which represent a preemptive right;
(7) certificates or instruments issued by a foreign government, or a foreign corporation, having the same nature as those referred to in Items 1 through 6 above, which are designated by the Minister of Finance and Economy; or
(8) other certificates or instruments designated by Presidential Decree which are similar to or related to those referred to in Items 1 through 7 above.[1]

Under an amendment of the KSEA in January 1997, the definition of securities was expanded to include stock options, stock index options, stock index futures options; depositary receipts; beneficiary certificates; and commercial papers issued by listed companies. Some of these items were previously designated by the Presidential Decree as securities and are now defined as securities under the KSEA.

regulation. The Act first defines the term "financial investment instrument" as "a right acquired by an agreement to pay, at a specific time in the present or in the future, money or any other valuable thing (hereinafter referred to as 'money or similar'), with an intention to earn a profit or avoid a loss, where there is a risk that the total amount of such money or similar, paid or payable, for the purpose of acquiring such right. . ."[1] The financial investment instrument in the Capital Market Act is further classified into securities and derivatives.[2] The Capital Market Act first gives a general description of what the term "securities" means. The term "securities" is a financial investment instrument where the investors' sole obligation is to pay at the time of acquiring such instrument and nothing further.[3] The Act further classify the securities into the following types:[4]

(1) Debt securities;
(2) Equity securities;
(3) Beneficiary certificates;
(4) Investment contract securities;
(5) Derivatives-combined securities; and
(6) Securities depositary receipts.

C. PUBLIC OFFERINGS AND EXEMPTED OFFERINGS IN THE PRE-CAPITAL-MARKET-ACT ERA

1. Public Offerings

§ KR:40 Registration Requirements for Public Offering

In Korea, there are two types of registration systems relating to the public offering. One is the "corporate registration system" (C/R System) and the other is the "securities registration system" (S/R System).[1] Although most information required to be disclosed and documents to be submitted in both systems are similar, there are some distinctions between these two registration systems. First, they apply to different situations. Second, there are some differences in the content of disclosure between the two registration systems. Furthermore, in order to offer shares to the public, a company must first register with the KSEC under the C/R System. After that, it can file a securities registration statement (S/R Statement) for the proposed public offering under the S/R System. To fully understand the disclosure system in Korea, it is important to understand these two types of registration systems.

The C/R System is the registration of the company with the KSEC. This registration is different from the registration with the Registrar of Companies when a company is incorporated. The C/R System is not common in other countries. Companies which have registered with the KSEC are said to be "in the preliminary stage of listing."[2] Corporations that belong to any of the following categories are required to register with the KSEC: (i) corporations wishing to list their securities on the Korea Stock Exchange; (ii) non-listed corporations intending to make a public offering of new issues or outstanding securities; (iii) non-listed corporations intending to have business consolidation with a listed company; (iv) non-listed corporations intending to have their securities traded on the KOSDAQ, the OTC market, organized by the Korea Securities Dealers Association; or (v) other corporations designated by the KSEC that meet the criteria prescribed by the Presidential Decree regarding the paid-in capital and designated by the KSEC.[3] Investment trust companies are not required to register with the KSEC. As amended in January 1997, the KSEC's power to designate companies to go public has been removed. Companies intending to issue non-equity related corporate debt are not required to register either. The total number of companies registered with the KSEC under the C/R System was 604 as of June 1997.[4] The purposes of the C/R System are to encourage disclosure of corporate information and to encourage companies going public. The benefit for registering with the KSEC under the C/R system is that a company will be subject to less stringent requirements when it applies to go public or list its shares on the KSE or registered with the KSDA.

In contrast, the S/R System requires the filing of the S/R Statement with the KSEC for the issues of securities to the public. Companies registered under the C/R System need not issue securities while companies file registration under the S/R System are those who plan to issue securities to the public. Under the S/R System, unless it is otherwise exempt, the issuer must file its registration with the KSEC in the following situations: (i) the offer for sale of new securities or outstanding securities to the public; (ii) the issuance of new shares by listed companies; or (iii) the offer for sale (resale) of existing securities to the public by large shareholders.[5] If the issuance of securities to the public is in the size of 1 billion Won or more, the issuer must file a S/R statement with the KSEC. Securities issued to more than 50 persons are considered a public offering and are required to register with the KSEC. Only those companies that have registered with the KSEC under the C/R System can file a public offering application under the S/R System.

§ KR:41 Basic Information Package

The registration and disclosure requirements under the C/R System are satisfied by filing with the KSEC the Articles of Incorporation of the company, financial statements, and information regarding the company's general condition and property it owns. Article 4 of the KSEA also requires the registered companies to report material information to the KSEC. Registered companies continue to submit financial reports for the purpose of records and public disclosure. The information provided by the registrants is available to the public for at least two years. In practice, the C/R System benefits the securities regulators much more than the investing public because this system allows the regulators to have the records of these companies which might or plan to make public offerings in the future. Normally investors wish to know the companies only after they have finalized and announced their public offering plans.

After registering under the C/R System, a company may file an S/R Statement under the S/R System for the proposed public offering. Offering of securities to the public for sale is prohibited unless the S/R Statement of the securities to be offered has been filed and accepted by the KSEC.[1] The basic disclosure information that should be included in the S/R Statement contains the following items as prescribed by the KSEC:[2]

1. a brief description of the corporation;
2. an outline of the offering plan;
3. intended use of proceeds obtained from new issue;
4. a description of the issuer's business;
5. certain financial matters;
6. an auditor's opinion;
7. matters to be heeded by investors;
8. other matters to be described in the prescribed registration statement form;
9. opinions of underwriters concerning the securities involved;
10. matters regarding facilities;
11. financial statements prepared before and after any merger during the last three-year period;
12. changes in the price of major products and raw materials;

§ KR:42 Definition and Procedure of Public Offering

An issuer of securities to the public is required to file registration with the KSEC if the offering value is more than 1 billion Won. Prior the 1997, an offering size above 100 million Won was required to file registration with the KSEC. A public offering of "new issues" and "outstanding securities" are separately defined in the KSEA. Article 2 (3) of the KSEA defines the term "public offering of new issues" as a solicitation for an offer to acquire newly issued securities as against many and unspecified persons, under uniform terms and conditions. Article 2 (4) of the KSEA defines the term "public offering of outstanding securities" as an offer to sell or a solicitation of an offer to buy outstanding securities as against many and unspecified persons, under uniform terms and conditions. For convenience to determine whether an offering constitutes a public offering, the KSEC promulgated a guideline which prescribed that an offer to more than fifty persons will be considered as a public offering.[1]

To protect investors, a company which plans to issue securities to the public is required to file a registration statement with the KSEC to disclose corporate information so that investors can make an informed investment decision. The KSEA also empowers the KSEC to set the waiting period during which the registration statement will be reviewed by the KSEC to ensure that the issuer has provided adequate information. Only after the the waiting period has lapsed will the registration statement become effective. Therefore, before the registration statement becomes effective, a company cannot issue shares to the public. The following is a standardized procedure for public offering of new shares:[2]

1. Planning of a public offering—Corporation (Board of Directors)

Steps 1 to 4 indicate what the issuer should do before it can file the registration statement. Steps 7 to 13 occur after the registration becomes effective.

§ KR:43 Pre-Filing Period

An issuer who intends to make a public offering should find a securities firm that can guide the issuer through the whole procedure. This securities firm normally will become the lead underwriter. The issuer needs to work out a plan of a public offering with the consulting securities firm. The plan for issuing new shares must be adopted by resolution of the shareholders' meeting or board of directors' meeting. After a resolution to make the public offering is adopted, the issuer must find a securities firm to be the lead underwriter of the public offering and an underwriting contract will be signed between them. Because underwriting involves risks, not every company can obtain a securities firm to be its underwriter.

In practice, it is easier for big companies or an affiliated company of the Chaebols to obtain a securities firm to be its underwriter. The situation has been that a small company will need to apply to a securities firm for underwriting its shares. The securities firm will then evaluate this company and its securities to be underwritten. It is easier for a large company to find a securities firm to underwrite its shares. However, because of the fierce competition in underwriting business in recent years, securities firms have become more active in maintaining a good relationship with their clients. The securities firms actively search for prospective candidates to establish good relationship. Most of the candidates come from personal contact of the managers as well as employees of the securities firms. Another source of candidates comes from the business group which the securities firm belongs to. Most of the securities firms are established by a "chaebol."[1] For example, the largest securities firm, Daewoo Securities, is established by Daewoo conglomerate; Hyundai Securities is established by Hyundai business group; Lucky Securities is established by Lucky-Goldstar business group. When a subsidiary or an affiliate of a business group is going public, the underwriting business will go to the securities firm established by that business group.

The lead underwriter will then form an underwriting syndicate. The issuer and the lead underwriter work very closely to prepare the required registration materials, including application forms, financial statements, and prospectus. The issuer must first file a public offering proposal to the KSEC before it files the registration statement.[2] The KSEC will make comments after reviewing the proposal.[3] After the issuer has made changes according to the KSEC's comment, the issuer may file the registration statement and materials with the KSEC.

§ KR:44 Pre-Effective Period

Can the issuer begin any promoting activities or can it make an offer to sell or solicit an offer to purchase the new issues or outstanding securities after the issuer has filed the registration statement with the KSEC? Before 1997, the KSEA imposed different treatments upon listed companies and non-listed companies. Such different treatment was abolished in 1997. Both listed companies and non-listed companies must comply with the registration requirements.

Article 8 (1) of the KSEA prohibits any person from making a public offering of a new issue or outstanding securities unless a registration statement is "filed with" and "accepted by" the KSEC. Article 9 of the KSEA states that the registration statement will become effective after the lapse of the waiting period after the registration statement has been accepted by the KSEC. So basically, no offer or solicitation to purchase the publicly offered securities can be made until the registration statement has become effective.

An issue here is to determine when the registration statement is accepted by the KSEC so that we can begin to count the waiting period. From the language of the KSEA as well as the official translation of the KSEA and other articles written by Korean authors, "accepted" is used instead of "received" or "approved."[1] "Accepted" is not defined in the KSEA or any other article. After carefully reading the provisions and consulting with the staff of the Securities Supervisory Board, the meaning of "accepted" in this context does not mean "received," nor does it mean "approved." "Accepted," according to a Korean judge's opinion, is properly used here because it means something more than "accepted."[2] The word "accepted" means that the administrative agency has the authority or discretion to decide whether it will accept or will not accept the registration after checking with the formality of the registration statement. Article 11 of the KSEA empowers the KSEC to issue an order to file an amended statement if the KSEC deems the registration statement is not complete or inadequate in the form or any material information. If an order to file an amendment statement is issued by the KSEC, the registration statement shall be construed not to be accepted by the KSEC. If an amendment statement is filed, whether it is voluntary or compulsory, the registration is deemed to be accepted when the amendment statement is accepted.[3]

The issue is how to decide the date when the registration statement is accepted. The KSEC does not issue a letter or any document approving the registration statement. Instead, the KSEC issues an order to file amended statement if the KSEC finds the registration statement is incomplete in its form or inadequate in any required information. The issuance of the order to file amended statement indicates that the registration statement is not accepted by the KSEC. The KSEC also has the power to request the issuer or underwriter to submit a report or materials for reference, or direct staff of the Securities Supervisory Board to inspect the accounting books and related materials of the issuer, underwriter, or other associated persons.[4] If the statement contains untrue statements or omission of material information, the KSEC has the power to order the issuer to amend the statement or to suspend or prohibit the issuance of the securities in question.[5] Therefore, the proper interpretation of the term "the registration statement is accepted" is that the KSEC after the review of the registration statement does not issue an order to file amended statement or a rejection letter. In this case, the time of acceptance shall be construed to be the time when the registration statement is filed. If an amended statement is filed and the KSEC does not reject or issue any other order to file amendment, the registration is deemed to be accepted at the time when the amended statement is filed. determination of the time of acceptance is crucial as to the calculation of the effective date of the registration statement, which is on the date that the time period fixed by the MOF (waiting period) elapses after the registration is accepted by the Commission.[6] In practice, the issuer and the underwriters normally will consult with the KSEC or KSSB staff to minimize the chances of being required to file amendment to the registration statement.

An important change of the KSEA in 1997 is that a preliminary prospectus may be used to offer securities for sale during the waiting period. Article 13 (2) of the KSEA allows the issuer to use a preliminary prospectus to invitate offer for sale of the securities before the registration statement takes effect. In order to use the preliminary prospectus, the issuer must satisfy conditions prescribed by the KSEC.

§ KR:45 Post-Effective Period

The issuer is required to submit the prospectus to the KSEC and copies of prospectuses should be placed in the issuer's offices, the KSEC, the KSE and securities firms for public inspection at the effective date of the registration statement.[1] However, the issuer is not required to deliver the prospectus to the purchasers or prospective subscribers. If the purchaser or prospective purchaser does not request the prospectus, the issuer need not deliver the prospectus to the purchaser in advance of sale.[2] The opinion of market professionals is that the prospectus does not play an important role in the individual investor's decision-making process to purchase the securities.[3]

The registration statement becomes effective by the passage of a prescribed time period (waiting period) from the date of acceptance of the registration statement by the KSEC.[4] The current schedule for calculating the waiting period from the date of acceptance of the registration is as follows: (i) 20 days for IPO shares; (ii) 10 days for a public offering of new shares by a listed company; (iii) 7 days for unsecured bond that has been issued before and for rights offerings through allotment of new shares to shareholder or third persons by a listed company; (iv) 15 days for a public offering of unsecured

§ KR:46 Timing and Other Considerations of a Public Offering

Companies prefer to make public offerings when the market climate is good. However, although there was no official announcement or articles regarding the intervention of public offering by securities regulators, it is said that in practice the KSEC or the KSSB sets the schedule to control the maximum amount of money that can be raised by public offerings.[1] Therefore, a company will need to discover whether its public offering application is within the KSEC's schedule and decide a proper time to submit the application. In practice, the securities firms contact the KSSB to inquire as to the possibility and time schedule to submit the public offering application.

Listed companies are subject to different procedure when issuing new securities. Formerly, listed companies had to go through an coordination procedure arranged by the Right Issues Committee of the Korea Listed Companies Association. The purpose of the coordination procedure is to prevent the oversupply of securities on the securities market.[2] Currently, when a listed company issues new shares, it no longer needs to go through the coordination procedure. After the coordination system was removed, a company needed to consult with its underwriter to discover the market conditions of stock demand and supply and then decide a proper time to submit the application. In practice, the securities firms contact the KSSB to ascertain the information because all public offerings must go through the KSSB.

§ KR:47 Reviewing of the Public Offering Application

Apart from some exemptions contained in Article 7 of the KSEA, a company must register with the KSEC before it can make a public offering.[1] The KSEC reviews the registration statements and other required documents as to form and substance. The KSEC will issue an order requiring the applicant to submit an amendment to the registration statement if the registration statement is found to be incomplete or inaccurate in any material respect.[2] If the KSEC issues an order, the registration statement is deemed not to have been accepted as of the date of the order.[3] If the applicant has filed an amendment, the registration statement is deemed to be accepted on the date when the amendment is filed.[4]

The KSEC may order the applicant, underwriter or other related persons to submit a report or other relevant records or may inspect the books, records or other relevant matters, if the KSEC deems it necessary to protect investors or the public interest.[5] The KSEC may also issue a stop order to temporarily or permanently suspend the registration statement if the registration statement contains omission or misrepresentation of material information.[6] However, it is very rare that the KSEC issues an official order to disapprove the application. In practice, the registration statement is not formally filed until the KSEC has informally reviewed and approved.[7]

The Korean stock market exhibits strong government intervention. As discussed before, the issue of new shares, including IPOs and rights offerings by listed companies, must obtain approval from the KSSB. More critically, the KSSB controls the number of companies and new shares that can be listed on the KSE. The purpose of the regulator's intervention in the public offering business is to control the supply of securities into the market to avoid sluggishness of the market due to oversupply of securities and lack of investment incentive.[8] The reviewing process of the public offering application has not been transparent and the regulation has been criticized for allowing the bureaucracy "arbitrary control over the stock market."[9] One flaw under the current practice is that the system could foster corruption.[10] A proposal was announced on July 12, 1996 by the MOF

§ KR:48 Underwriting

Institutions participating in underwriting activities are categorized into three groups: the managing underwriters, the underwriting syndicate and the sales group. The managing underwriters directly contract with the issuer to decide the issuing price, assume the risk of any unsold securities and make a market for the newly listed securities. The underwriting syndicate is formed by the managing underwriters to conduct underwriting activities, such as promotion and advertisement activities. The sales group is designated by the managing underwriters to perform the distribution of securities to the public investors.

The KSEA recognizes three kinds of underwriting: firm-commitment underwriting, stand-by underwriting and best-effort underwriting.[1] In practice, only firm-commitment underwriting is employed.[2] The managing underwriters purchase all shares from the issuer and resell them to the investors. [1]Similar to Taiwan's underwriting system, there are three types of underwriting in Korea. In a firm-commitment underwriting case, the underwriters acquire all shares from the issuer and distribute them to the public investors. In a stand-by underwriting case, the underwriters agree to acquire the unsold portion of the underwritten securities from the issuer. In a best-effort underwriting case, the underwriters, acting as agent, sell the public offering securities for the issuer on the commission basis. KOREA STOCK EXCHANGE, supra, at 34; Interview with Mr. Choon-Won Lee, Deputy Director, Department of Registration of Corporation, SSB, KSEC, in Seoul, Korea (at 3:00 p.m., Nov. 11, 1994).

commitment basis, the strange situation is that underwriters do not make money from the spread between the price they pay to the issuer and the price they receive from public subscribers according to the KSEC's information.[3] Instead, they receive commission from the issuer. The reason for using only the firm-commitment underwriting is to impose a burden on securities firms as to encourage them to be more careful when they accept an issuing company. It is intended to ensure the quality of the underwritten shares. After the underwritten shares are listed on the stock exchange, the managing underwriters are responsible for market making of the issue for three months after listing.[4]

Under current rules, about 60 percent of the total public offering is available for public subscription; 20 percent of the offered shares is reserved for institutional investors and 20 percent is offered to the employee stock ownership association.[5]

§ KR:49 Exemptions from Registration

Generally, a company which intends to list its shares on the KSE or intends to have its shares traded on the OTC market or is designated by the KSEC must first register the company with the KSEC.[1] Thereafter, when it is going to make a public offering, the company is required to file registration statement with the KSEC regarding the proposed public offering.[2] However, some types of companies and transactions are exempt from the above requirements.

According to Article 5-3 of the KSEA Enforcement Decree, the following companies and transactions are exempt from registration:

(1) Beneficiary certificates issued by trust companies according to the Trust Business Act;
(2) Beneficiary certificates issued by securities investment trust companies according to the Securities Investment Trust Business Law;
(3) Beneficiary certificates issued by foreign securities investment trust companies;
(4) Debt securities issued by securities companies;
(5) Securities issued by national and local government;
(6) Issuance of bonds by a corporation incorporated under special legislation, such as bonds issued by the Korea Securities Finance Corporation;
(7) Issuance of certificates of capital contribution by a corporation incorporated under special legislation;

(8) Stock index options.

The above securities offerings are exempt for different reasons. The issuance of beneficiary certificates is exempt from registering with the KSEC but is regulated by different laws. Local and central governments, corporations incorporated under special legislation, and some government invested institutions are exempt from registration requirements when they issue securities because they are backed by the government and do not have the concern for investors' protection.

Private placements are not officially exempt. However, since the KSEA imposes the registration requirement only on issuers intending to make public offerings, private placement is exempt from registration. It is necessary to note that this exemption is not available for listed companies because the KSEA explicitly requires listed companies to file registration when they issue new shares.[3]

If the offering amount is in a small size that does not exceed the amount prescribed by the Regulation of the MOFE, the offering is exempt.[4] Currently, an offering amount under 1 billion Korean Won is exempt from registration. The following cases are also exempt from registration: (1) new shares are issued for the conversion of reserves into new capital; (2) new shares issued as stock dividends; (3) new shares issued for the conversion of convertible bonds; (4) new shares issued upon exercise of warrants attached to bonds; (5) new shares issued as the consideration of a merger or business consolidation; or (6) new shares issued as a result of stock split or other events which do not require payment for the new shares.[5]

2. Public Offering Regulation under the Capital Market Act

§ KR:50 Registration Requirement

Any company intend to publicly offer securities must file registration statement with and be accepted by the Financial Services Commission.[1] A company may file a universal shelf registration statement with the FSC if the issuer plan to publicly offer the securities over a period of time.[2] The registration statement will become effective on the day that the expiration of the time period prescribed by the Prime Minister and the time schedule varies depending on the type of securities offered.[3]

§ KR:52 Liability for Fraudulent Documents

Persons causing the misrepresentation or omission of material information in the registration statement or investment prospectus are liable to the subscribers of the securities publicly offered by the issuer. § KR:53 Liability for Fraudulent Documents—Measurement of Damages

In the primary market, in the case of fraudulent registration statement, the claimants who subscribe shares from the issuer or purchase securities from the secondary offering shall claim the damages from the persons prescribed in Article 125 of the Capital Market. The Act provides guidance in how to estimate the amount of damages. The amount of damages is estimated by subtracting any of the following items from the amount paid by the subscriber or purchaser of the securities:[1]

(1) The market price of the securities at the closing of the litigation;
(2) The disposal price if the securities are disposed prior to the closing of the litigation.

The causation that the damages are caused by the fraudulent registration statement is presumed by the Act. However, the defendants may rebut the presumption by proving that the damages sustained by the plaintiffs are not caused by the misrepresentation or omission of the registration statement.[2]

D. CONTINUING DISCLOSURE REQUIREMENTS OF PUBLIC COMPANIES

§ KR:55 Periodical Business Reports

A listed company is required to file periodical business reports, including the annual business report, half-year business report, and first and third quarterly business report with the Financial Services Commission.[1] There is a timetable for filing the business reports:

(2) Half-Year Business Report: 45 days after the close of the first six months of the fiscal year;
(3) 1st and 3rd Quarterly Business Report: 45 days after the close of the first and third quarter of the fiscal year.

For a listed company that needs to provide consolidated financial report, the timetable for filing the business reports is as follows:

(2) Half-Year Business Report: 60 days after the close of the first six months of the fiscal year;

Those potential responsible may also escape the liabilities if the purchasers or sellers of the securities knew the misrepresentation or omissions of material information at the time of making the trading.[2]

E. FRAUD, MANIPULATION AND INSIDER TRADING

§ KR:58 General

In a 1997 amendment, the Securities and Exchange Act included a new section to prohibit unfair securities transactions. Activities that are prohibited include the short-term sale and short-selling by insiders, the use of non-public corporate information to trade securities, and the manipulation of the market.[1] Article 188-4 of the KSEA prohibits the use of match orders or false transactions to create a false image of active trading or to cause any other person to make a wrong judgment on the trading of listed securities. Match orders are prohibited because this type of transactions are pre-arranged by the buyer and seller to enter their buy and sell orders at the same time and at the same price that would create an image of active trading on listed securities and would cause investors to make wrong judgment based on that false image. Although the language of this provision prohibits unfair trading on listed securities, it also applies to the registered securities which are traded on the KSDA OTC market. Article 188-4 also prohibits any person from evoking transactions to create a misleading image of active trading or to manipulate the price of such securities for the purpose of inducing others to buy or sell

§ KR:65 Insider Trading

The Capital Market Act prohibits two types of insider trading activities. The first type is short-swing trading activities and the second type is trading in possession of nonpublic material information. Insiders who engaged in short-swing trading are subject to disgorgement of short-swing trading profit but are not a crime. In contrast, those who engaged in securities trading while in possession of nonpublic material information are subject to by civil and criminal liabilities.

§ KR:66 Reporting of Shareholding by Executives and Significant Shareholders

The major targeted persons of insider trading regulation are corporate insiders and significant shareholders. Therefore, the first requirement associated with the insider trading regulation is the reporting requirement on the corporate executives and significant shareholders of listed companies. The executive or significant shareholder is required to report his/her shareholding to the KSFC and the KRX within 5 days after becoming the corporate executive or significant shareholder, or any changes of the shareholding.[1] The KSFC shall keep the records for three years for public inspection. Corporate insiders holding exchange-traded derivatives having the underlying assets of the corporate securities beyond certain amount are also required to report to the Financial Services Commission and the KRX.[2]

§ KR:67 Short-Swing Trading

If the corporation fails to make the claim within 2 months after receiving the demand from shareholders, the shareholders may make the claim on behalf of the corporation.[2] Shareholders who file a lawsuit to claim the short-swing trading profits on behalf of the corporation may be reimbursed of any cost associated with such claim.[3] If the Securities and Futures Commission (KSFC) is aware that insiders have derived short-swing trading profits, the KSFC may request the corporation to disclose the content in the website of the corporation.[4]

§ KR:68 Insider Trading While in Possession of Nonpublic Material Information

An insider may not use non-public information or tip other persons such information and authorize them to trade the company's securities.[1] In order to hold a person guilty of insider trading, several constituents must be proved. First, the person must fall within the definition of insider. He must be an officer, employee, or large shareholder, or other persons listed under the Capital Market Act. Second, he must have obtained material nonpublic information and have used such information or authorized other persons to trade the company's securities. Whether or not the insider has profited from such trading will not affect his guilt for committing the insider trading crime.

(1) In addition to criminal charges, an insider who trades the company's securities with material non-public information may also be subject to civil liabilities. The Capital Market Act prohibits anyone from trading the corporate securities if he/she is aware of material non-public information. However, the Act also prescribes the following situations as conditions for incurring the liabilities:[2] The corporation and its affiliated companies who becomes aware of the material nonpublic information in the course of performance of business;

(2) Executive, employee, or agent, who becomes aware of the material nonpublic information in the course of performance of business;

(3) A significant shareholder who becomes aware of the material nonpublic information in the course of exercising his/her rights;

(4) A de facto director or shadow director, having authority to grant authorization, give instructions; or supervise the corporation, who becomes aware of the material nonpublic information in the course of exercising the power or authority;

(5) A person who has entered into or is negotiating a contract with the corporation becomes aware of the material nonpublic information in the course of entering into, negotiating, or performing the contract;

(7) A tippee: a person who received the material nonpublic information from the aforesaid persons.

In the context of a tender offer, there is a restriction on trading of the securities of the corporations involving in the tender offer. The following persons are prohibited from trading in specific securities when they are aware of the material nonpublic information regarding the initiation or discontinuance of the tender offer for stocks:[3]

(1) A tender offeror, its affiliated companies, an executive, employee, or agent of the tender offeror;
(2) A significant shareholders of the tender offeror;
(3) A person having authority to grant permission or authorization, give instructions or supervise the tender offeror, such as the de facto director or shadow director;
(4) A person who has entered into a contract w or is negotiating the contract with the tender offeror;

(6) A tippee who received the material nonpublic information regarding the initiation or discontinuance of the tender offer from the tender offeror or any other person who fall into the scope of subparagraph (1) to (5).

§ KR:69 Liabilities for Damages Arising from Insider Trading

Any person who violates insider trading law as prescribed by Article 174 of the Capital Market Act is liable to the persons who sustain damages from trading the specific securities at issue.[1] The statute of limitation for bringing law suit against the insider trading violator is within one year after knowing the violation or within three years from the day of the violation.[2]

F. TENDER OFFERS, TAKEOVERS AND OTHER CORPORATE COMBINATIONS

§ KR:70 General

Korean companies are allowed to take over other Korean or foreign companies. However, foreigners have been prohibited from acquiring Korean companies through merger and acquisition (M&A). In order to take over another firm, the acquiring company must hire a securities company to value the company's assets and work out the takeover transaction.[1] Business combinations through mergers and acquisitions may create a more competitive and viable business entity. However, a special concern in Korea is that M&A enables the Chaebols, the giant business conglomerate, to enhance their economic power, while small and medium businesses find it hard to expand their business. Another concern is that the expansion of business without focus by acquiring other firms has exposed the phenomenon that many family-owned businesses, including Chaebols, lack professional management.[2]

The rules of M&A have been relaxed since December 1997 when Korea encountered financial crisis. The purpose for relaxing the rules of M&A is to help the exit of financially troubled companies and to stimulate efficient management of Korean corporations. The new and proposed rules for M&A will be discussed in the following paragraphs. The tender offer regulation is currently set forth under Part III Chapter II Section I of the Capital Market Act.

§ KR:71 Tender Offers

Tender offers were first introduced in 1976 by the KSEA. Since its introduction, there has been very few tender offer cases because of cultural and business traditions. Under Korean culture and traditional business practice, to make tender offers to acquire another company was considered unethical. According to an article of the Chairman of the KSE, there were only five tender offers from 1994 to 1996.[1]

A tender offer is defined as any offer to purchase or any solicitation to sell securities outside the securities market as against unspecified persons. Tender offers can occur only outside the securities market i.e., outside the Korea Exchange market. The offeror may make a tender offer in cash or by issuing securities in exchange of the target company's securities or combine both means.

The tender offer provisions of the KSEA were substantially amended in January, 1997. Under the new KSEA, the tender offer provisions apply to shares, rights which may be used to purchase new shares, convertible bonds, bonds with warrants, and exchangeable bonds issued by both KOSPI and KOSDAQ companies.[2] However, the tender offer rules do not apply to companies registered with the KSFC but not listed on the KOSPI or quoted on the KOSDAQ. Previously, the tender offer provisions apply only to stocks, rights, and convertible bonds issued by listed companies. The amended KSEA expands the scope of securities that can become the target of tender offers and expands the application of tender offer provision to KOSDAQ companies. The tender offer provisions of the Capital Market Act apply to both the KOSPI and KOSDAQ companies. Any person intends to acquire shares of a target company outside the stock market shall make a tender offer if he/she together with his/her specially related persons will hold more than 5% of the outstanding shares of the target company.[3]

To make a tender offer, the tender offeror must first make a public notice of the tender offer through two or more newspapers circulated nationwide.[4] The public notice must contain the following information:

(1) The acquirer of the tender offer;
(2) The target company of the tender offer;
(3) The purpose of the tender offer;
(4) The class and number of stocks subject to the tender offer;
(5) The terms and conditions of the tender offer, including the period, price, and payment date of the tender offer; and
(6) The source of funding other matters prescribed by Presidential Decree as necessary for the protection of investors.[5]

Once the public notice of the tender offer has issued, the tender offeror must file the tender offer statement with the Financial Services Commission and the KRX on the same day or the next business day if the date of the public notice is a holiday.[6] After the offeror has submitted the tender offer statement to the FSC and KRX, a copy of the tender offer statement must be delivered to the target company before the statement becomes effective.[7] The target company does not have the obligation to express the opinion regarding the tender offer. However, the target company may present his opinion.[8] If he decides to deliver opinion regarding the tender offer, he must file a statement with the FSC regarding the content of the opinion.[9] The FSC will also check whether the offeror has deposited adequate funds into a designated financial institution to guarantee the completion of the tender offer.

In addition to the tender offer registration statement, the offeror must prepare a prospectus of the tender offer and make it available for public inspection.[10] Once the tender offer statement becomes effective, the offeror must make a public announcement promptly. In practice, the tender offeror shall publish the required information, including the name of the offeror, the tender offer period, the purchasing price and the number of shares to be tendered, on at least two local major newspapers.

From the above discussion, a tender offer may not begin unless and until the following conditions have been met: (1) the tender offeror has filed a tender offer statement with the Financial Services Commisison and the statement has taken effect; (2) a notice of the tender offer has been delivered to the issuer of the securities (target company); (3) a written explanation has been made available for public inspection; (4) the tender offeror has made the public announcement and published the required information on major newspapers immediately after the tender offer statement takes effect; (5) a copy of the tender offer statement has been submitted to the KRX.

During the specified period of the tender offer, the offeror and persons specially related to him are prohibited from purchasing securities by any means other than the tender offer.[11] Therefore, the offeror may not purchase the securities from the stock market during the period of the tender offer. The tender offer period must be at least 20 days and no more than 60 days after the tender offer statement takes effect.[12]

Exceptionally, there are two situations that the offeror need not register with the KSEC. The first situation is where the total number of shares acquired under the tender offer is less than 10 percent of the outstanding shares. The second situation is when a company buys back its own securities from shareholders.

IV. REFORM OF FINANCIAL MARKET REGULATION IN KOREA: THE FINANCIAL INVESTMENT SERVICES AND CAPITAL MARKETS ACT

§ KR:72 Overview

The Financial Investment Services and Capital Markets Act (hereinafter the Capital Markets Act) became effective on February 4, 2009. The enactment of the Capital Markets Act effectively repealed the following laws:[1]

(1) Securities and Exchange Act
(2) Futures Trading Act
(3) Indirect Investment Asset Management Business Act

[10]Capital Market Act, § 137(1).

[1]Financial Investment Services and Capital Markets Act, Addenda, Article 2 (Repealed Acts), pp. 849–175.

(4) Trust Business Act
(5) Merchant Bank Act
(6) Securities and Futures Exchange Act

The Capital Markets Act consolidated the contents of these six repealed laws and added new principles to create a new regulatory framework. Because of the consolidation of financial investment services and capital market related laws, financial investment services and financial investment products are broadly defined to cover as comprehensively as possible. The scope of financial investment services is much broader than the securities defined under the previous KSEA. The purposes of the Capital Market Act were to further develop the securities, futures, and other financial services industry and to allow corporations to fully utilize the capital market and to support the innovation of new financial products.[2]

The Capital Market Act has changed the way the financial investment industry is regulated. In the past, different financial investment industries were regulated by separate laws and regulations. However, the Capital Market Act adopts the principle of "functional regulation" such that "each activity that has the same economic substance should, in principle, be regulated equally, no matter which financial institution is handling the matter."[3] The Capital Market Act categorizes the financial investment business into the following types:[4]

1. Investment trading business;
2. Investment brokerage business;
3. Collective investment business;
4. Investment advisory business;
5. Discretionary investment business; or
6. Trust business.

§ KR:73 Accounting and Auditing

The requirements that a company should keep accounts can be found in both the Commercial Code as well as in the Securities and Exchange Act.

§ KR:74 Commercial Code

The Commercial Code requires the directors of the stock companies to prepare the financial statements. Article 447 of the Commercial Code requires that a balance sheet, a statement of profit and loss, and a statement of earned surplus distribution or deficits disposal must be prepared. These documents must be submitted to the internal auditors six weeks prior to the annual general meeting. After receiving the financial statements, the auditors must submit their audit statement to the directors within four weeks. It is important to note that these auditors are elected and appointed by shareholders at the general meeting of shareholders. The appointment is for a term of three years. The establishment of the board of auditors is to monitor the performance of directors. Therefore, an auditor cannot be a director concurrently. Article 448 of the Commercial Code requires directors to keep the financial statements and the audit statements in the head office for public inspection for five years.

§ KR:75 Capital Market Act

Listed companies are required to file a business report to the Financial Services Commission and Korea Exchange within 90 days after the close of the business year.[1] Additionally, the half-year business report, and the first quarter and third quarter business reports shall be filed within 45 days after the close of each term.[2] For companies that are required to file a consolidated report, the half-year report, the first and third quarter business report shall be filed within 60 days after the close of each term.[3]

The business report shall include the purpose, trade name, details of the business, the remuneration of executives, and the matters regarding finance.[4] Other matters prescribed by the Presidential Decree, must also be included in the business report:[5]

1. Signatures of the representative director and the director responsible for submitting the report under Article 159(7) of the Act on the matters under subparagraphs of Article 169;
2. An overview of the company;
3. Matters concerning the organization of the company, including the board of directors, and its affiliated companies;
4. Matters concerning shareholders;
5. Matters concerning executives and employees;
6. Details of transactions with major shareholders (including their specially related persons), executives, or employees of the company;
7. Matters concerning financial affairs and annexed statements;
8. The accounting auditor's audit opinion;
9. Other matters specified and publicly notified by the Financial Services Commission as those of which it is necessary for investors to be informed.

§ KR:76 Audit

In Korea, listed companies are required to submit only annual and semi-annual financial reports but not quarterly reports. When preparing the financial statements, such as balance sheets, income statements and statements of cash flow, these financial accounting documents must be audited by a certified auditor according to the Act on External Audit of Stock Companies.[1] Only the annual financial report must be audited. The audited financial reports are submitted to and reviewed by the Securities and Futures Commission.[2] A company which is required to appoint an external auditor according to Article 2 of the Act on External Audit of Stock Companies must obtain the approval from the shareholders' meeting.[3] In order to control the quality of accounting and auditing practices, the Enforcement Decree on External Audit of Stock Companies, was enacted.[4] Under the Enforcement Decree, the Securities and Futures Commission (under the request of the Financial Supervisory Commission) is responsible for the regulation and supervision of the accounting and auditing practices, including the surveillance of the audit reports. The SFC may take necessary follow-up measures if evidences show any violation of the Act has occurred.[5] The SFC has the power to designate or to replace the auditor of a stock list corporation in auditing the financial statement.[6] If the auditor forged, altered, damaged or destructed the protocol of an audit in violation of the Article 14-2(3) of the Act on External Audit of Stock Companies, he/she can be punished for up to five years in prison or fine for up to KR Won 30 million.[7]

V. INTERNATIONAL SECURITIES TRANSACTIONS

§ KR:77 Foreign Investment in Korea

Korea established its internationalization of stock market plan in January 1981. Indirect foreign investment in Korean stock market became possible through the establishment of international investment trusts and international funds. The international investment trusts are managed by Korean investment trust companies based in Korea. These investment trusts are approved by the government and are available only for foreign investors. The first two international investment trusts, the Korea International Trust and the Korea Trust, were established in November 1981. Eleven additional international investment trusts were established through the year of 1990. These investment trusts are all open-end funds, managed by three Korean investment trust companies, namely Korea Investment Trust Company, Daehan Investment Trust Company, and Citizens Investment Management Trust Company, which are available for non-residents to indirectly invest in Korean securities.

Another type of investment instrument available for foreign investors is the international fund. The international funds, such as Korea Fund, Korea-Europe Fund, and Korea Asia Fund, were authorized by the Korean government. However, these funds were established according to foreign laws and were technically treated as foreign investment companies. Most of these international funds are closed-end funds and are listed on foreign stock exchanges. Investors must buy and sell the shares of these funds through the stock exchange. For instance, the Korea Fund was established according to the US Investment Act of 1940. Its shares were initially listed on the New York Stock Exchange (NYSE) in August 1984. The Korea-Europe Fund was established according to the UK law and is listed on the London Stock Exchange.

As of the end of 1997, there were 4 closed-end mutual funds (Fidelity Advisor Korea Fund, Korea Equity Fund, Korea Fund, and Korean Investment Fund) listed on the NYSE and one open-end mutual fund (Matthews Korea Fund) engage in portfolio investment solely on Korean securities. These funds are authorized by the Korean government and are established according to the US law. The reason for allowing the establishment of only closed-end mutual funds for foreign investors is concerning capital flow, monetary policy, and domestic money supply. Unlike open-end mutual fund, a closed-end fund's size is fixed; its authorized and outstanding investment units cannot be increased or decreased. Beneficiary owner of closed-end funds must purchase or redeem their beneficiary units from the open market. The money of a closed-end fund is invested and will stay in the Korean market for a longer period of time. In contrast, an open-end mutual fund can increase and decrease its fund size when investors or beneficiary owners purchase or redeem their beneficiary units. When investors redeem their shares, the open-end fund manager will have to sell part of its portfolio exchange them from Korean won to a foreign currency to repay the redemption. Therefore, the foreign open-end mutual fund increases the capital flow in and out of Korea. If amount of currency conversion is huge, it would cause the unstable exchange rate and government's control over money supply and inflation.

The Korean stock market was open to foreign investors for direct investment in January 1992. Foreign individual as well as institutional investors must register with the Securities Supervisory Board (KSSB) before they can make investment. Foreign investors are not required to designate a standing proxy but are highly recommended to designate a standing proxy to one of the Korean securities companies, banks, or the Korean Securities Depository (KSD), which can help process investment registration and other investment related activities, such as collection of dividend. According to the statistics published by the Korea Stock Exchange, the total fund brought into Korea was US$12.6 billion in 1996 and the total inflow of investment capital amounted US$51.3 billion during the period of 1992 to September 1997. After the remittance of US$32.6 billion, a net inflow of capital for US$18.7 billion remains. From the historical number, foreign investors left most of their investment funds in Korea stock market during 1992 and 1993 and began to repatriate most of their investment capital from Korea since 1994. There were 2,745 registered foreign investors, with 1,092 individuals and 1,653 institutions at the end of 1993. Among them, investors from the United States (983), the United Kingdom (478), and Taiwan (353) account 66 percent of total registered foreign investors in Korea. The number of foreign investors in October 1997 was more than double than that in 1993. Total registered foreign investors reached 6,255 at the end of October 1997 while 1,833 were individuals. Types of foreign institutional investors include investment fund (3,101), pension fund (458), bank (234), securities company (240), insurance company (138), and others (201).

Prior to January 1992, foreign investors could invest in Korean securities only through the international investment trusts and the three international funds approved by the Korean government. Since the opening of the Korean stock market for foreign direct investment, foreign investors have more channels to invest in Korean securities. In addition to the above mentioned international investment trusts and international funds authorized by Korean government, foreign investors may choose other open-end mutual funds managed by other foreign investment trust companies or may optionally choose to invest directly by themselves.

Korea has set an investment ceiling for foreign investment since the opening of Korean stock market for direct foreign investment in January 1992. The ceiling was first set at 10 percent for aggregate foreign investment and 3 percent for individual investment. The 10 percent aggregate foreign investment ceiling means that total foreign investment in a single local company cannot exceed 10 percent of its outstanding shares. The 3 percent ceiling is to prohibit any single foreign investors from investing more than 3 percent of any single Korean company's outstanding shares. The investment ceiling has been gradually raised since 1992. The ceiling was raised to 23 percent and 6 percent for aggregate and individual foreign investment respectively in May 1997. Because of the financial crisis at the end of 1997, Korea signed a Memorandum of Understanding with the International Monetary Fund (IMF), in which the IMF agreed to extend emergency loan to Korea and Korea agreed to reform its financial structure and accelerate the opening of its capital market. As a result of the agreement between Korea and the IMF, Korea raised its aggregate foreign investment ceiling to 50 percent and no limits on the amount that an individual foreigner may invest.

Korea completed the IMF bailout program in August 2001.[1] The Korea Stock Exchange, KOSDAQ, and the Korea Futures Exchange agreed to consolidate in 2004 and launched Korea Exchange (KRX) in January 2005. Korea Stock Exchange is currently operating as a division of the KRX.

§ KR:78 Foreign Securities Companies in Korea

As part of the open-market policy, foreign securities companies can establish branches or representative offices in Korea. This door was first opened to foreign securities firms in March 1991. In June 1991, foreign securities firms were allowed to apply for KSE membership. As of the end of 1997, there were 19 branches and 18 representative offices establish foreign securities companies or investment banks. The top two foreign branches with highest operating capital were established by Bankers Trust International and CS First Boston Ltd.

In addition to establishing a branch or representative office, foreign securities companies with minimum capital of 300 billion won may establish a joint venture securities company with Korean companies which do not belong to any of the 30 major business conglomerates (Chaebols). The minimum capital requirement for a joint venture securities company is 50 billion won. To form a joint venture securities company, the foreign company must contribute between 40 to 50 percent of the joint venture's total capital. If there are more than one foreign company participating the joint venture, at least one of the foreign companies must have at least 300 billion won of capital and contribute more than 20 percent of the total capital in the joint venture. There were three joint venture securities companies as of the end of 1996. These three joint ventures are all regular members of the KSE.

§ KR:79 Foreign Companies Listed on the KRX

Foreign companies were not allowed to issue securities in Korea before 1995. In 1995, international financial institutions were allowed to issue won-denominated bonds. The Asian Development Bank was the first international financial institution that issued won-denominated bonds (Arirang Bonds) valued US$100 million in Korea in October 1995. International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (IBRD) issued US$100 million worth of Arirang Bonds in April 1997; European Bank for Reconstruction and Development (EBRD) issued the same value of Arirang Bonds in May of the same year. Foreign companies were not allowed to issue securities and list their shares in Korea until May 1996. According to the KRX, the first foreign company applying listing on the Korea Stock Exchange occurred in July 2007.[1]

In order to be listed in the KOSPI Stock Market, a foreign company must first apply to the KRX for review of the eligibility.[2] After the KRX notifies the foreign company eligible for listing, the foreign company shall submit initial listing application to the KRX.[3] The foreign must meet the following requirements so that it can list the foreign stocks or the depositary receipts (DRs) of the foreign stocks:[4]

1. The period of operation must be at least three years;
2. Size of Business: The number of foreign stocks or DRs to be listed shall be at least 1,000,000 shares or units;
3. Stock Distribution Requirements: specified in [§ 32(1)4];
    a. If the foreign applicant has listed its shares on a foreign exchange, only [§ 32(1)4c] shall apply. In this case, the number of minority shareholders shall be determined on the basis of number of foreign stocks or DRs of foreign stocks publicly offered or distributed in Korea; and
    b. Pursuant to [§ 7-2], the number of shares acquired by the listing sponsor shall be excluded from the total number of shares issued.
4. Financial and Business Performance Requirement: Same as the requirement for domestic listing companies specified in § 32(1)5;
5. Auditor's Audit Opinion: There should be at least three fiscal years' financial statements that the auditor's audit opinions in the audit reports are unqualified.

§ KR:80 Korean Companies Listed on Foreign Stock Exchanges

The Korean government encourages well established blue chip companies to seek listing on major foreign stock exchanges. As of the end of 1997, there were three Korean companies listed on the New York Stock Exchange, twelve listed on the London Stock Exchange, and twelve listed on the Luxembourg Stock Exchange. Samsung was the first Korean company listed on the foreign stock exchange (Luxembourg Stock Exchange) on December 19, 1990. The first Korean company listed on the NYSE was Pohang Iron and Steel Company (POSCO) on October 14, 1994. These companies issued depositary receipt on the foreign stock markets when they were listed.

Before December 1997, only companies listed on the KSE were allowed to issue securities in foreign markets. On November 14, 1997, this policy changed. Companies registered with the KSDA and traded on the KOSDAQ market have been allowed to issue securities overseas since December 1997.

§ KR:81 Korean Investors Investing in Foreign Securities

Since 1985, Korean investors have been allowed to invest in foreign securities. However, there have been restrictions applied to both individual and institutional investors. For example, Korean investors were allowed to invest only limited amounts of money in foreign securities. Before 1995, the most popular way for Korean investors to invest in foreign securities was to invest indirectly in foreign securities via investment funds managed by Korean securities investment trust companies. Korean investors hold the beneficiary certificates issued by the investment trust companies that manage portfolio investment in foreign securities. In February 1995, the restrictions on institutional investors were totally lifted. The investment restrictions on individuals were also vacated in April 1996. Currently, Korean investors can freely invest in securities listed on any foreign stock exchanges.

§ KR:82 Participation in International Securities Organizations

One of the important steps toward internationalization of local stock market is the participation in international securities organizations where members of the international organization may exchange information and learning experiences from other members. Korea has exploited this rich resource by joining the International Organization of Securities Commission (IOSCO) and the International Federation of Stock Exchanges (FIBV).

The IOSCO is an organization, whose members are securities regulatory bodies and self-regulatory organizations. Members of the IOSCO and its various Committees are benefitted from creating close linkage with other members, sharing information and experiences with other members, and establishing cooperative program to promote a more efficient, sound and transparent market domestically and internationally. The Korean Securities and Exchange Commission is the regular member of the IOSCO. The KSEC is also a member of the Emerging Markets Committee and a member of the Asia-Pacific Regional Committee under the IOSCO. The Korea Stock Exchange and the Korea Securities Dealers' Association are members of the SRO Consultative Committee.

The World Federation of Exchanges (WFE), formerly the FIBV, is a trade organization composed of 58 securities, futures, and options exchanges all over the world. Its members constitute about 97 percent of the world stock exchanges capitalization. The FIBV create a platform for its member to exchange information and experiences which will help members to develop their own stock market. Korea Stock Exchange is a member of the WFE.

VI. INVESTMENT COMPANIES AND INVESTMENT ADVISERS

§ KR:83 Historical Development of Investment Companies

There is no such entity called an investment company under the KSEA. Instead, it is commonly known as the securities investment trust company. Formerly, the securities investment trust companies were not regulated by the KSEA but by the Securities Investment Trust Business Law. In order to engage in securities investment trust business, the fund manager must obtain a license from the MOFE. The minimum capital requirement for establishing an investment trust company is 30 billion won. The first investment trust company was established in August 1974. At the end of 1996, there were 23 investment trust companies and 17 investment banking firms licensed to operate securities investment trust business. The total number of mutual funds run by these licensed companies totaled 2,866 with 7.1 million unit-holders.

Investment advisory business is carried by companies which have registered with the MOFE according to Article 70-2 of the KSEA. Individuals are not allowed to engage in investment advisory business. The investment advisory company can provide investment advice but is prohibited from being entrusted with the power to make investment decision for its client. Article 70-6 of the KSEA also prohibits an investment advisory company from engaging in any securities business, such as dealing, brokerage, and underwriting, other than the advisory business. The first investment advisory company was established in March 1988. As of the end of 1996, there were 16 investment advisory companies in Korea.

§ KR:84 Collective Investment Business Under the Capital Market Act

The Capital Market Act defines the "collective investment scheme" in the various forms of business entities. It can be in the form of trust called an investment trust.[1] It can also be in various forms under the Commercial Act and the Civil Act. It can be in the form of stock corporation (called investment company); limited liability company (called investment limited liability company); limited partnership company (called investment limited partnership company); association (called investment association); undisclosed association (called undisclosed investment association).[2] It can also be in the form of a limited partnership company investing and managing its fund in equity securities by issuing equity securities through private placement which is called private equity fund.[3]

A collective investment business entity shall first register with the Financial Services Commission and the FSC shall decide whether to approve the registration within 20 days.[4] Detailed rules regarding various forms of collective investment business entities are set forth in Part V (Collective Investment Schemes) Chapter II (Organization, etc. of the Collective Investment Schemes) of the Capital Market Act.

§ KR:85 Investment Advisory Business Under the Capital Market Act

An investment advisory business is defined as "a business providing advice on the value of financial investment instruments or related judgments."[1] The investment advisory business is a type of financial investment business. To engage in the investment advisory business and other types of financial investment business, a business entity must register with and authorized by the Financial Services Commission.[2] In registration, an entity must specify the following items in addition to its intention to engage in investment advisory business: (1) the range of financial investment instruments, i.e., securities, exchange traded derivatives, or over the counter traded derivatives); and (2) the class of investors.[3] An investment advisory business must retain professional advisors for investment recommendations. According to the Enforcement Decree, there must be at least one full-time executive or employee for most forms of invest advisory business entities but the minimum is four if a merchant bank is involved.[4]

VII. BROKERAGE AND DEALING BUSINESSES

§ KR:86 Historical Development

In order to conduct brokerage business in Korea, a person must obtain a license from the Ministry of Finance and Economy. Only stock corporations recommended by the Korea Stock Exchange are eligible to apply for a brokerage license. In other words, only securities companies which have met the capital and other requirements and obtained a brokerage license may engage in brokerage business. A securities company may apply for a license for a general securities company which may engage in brokerage, dealing and underwriting businesses. It may apply for any or all of the above three businesses depending on its capital strength.

Before April 1, 1997, in order to incorporate a securities company, disregarding the category of businesses it operates, a company must have a minimum paid-in capital of 50 billion Won (US$50 million). Beginning on April 1, 1997, a securities company is still required to have more than 50 billion Won to undertake all three types of securities businesses. However, to engage in both brokerage and dealing businesses, a securities company needs only 30 billion Won (US$30 million) of paid-in capital. The government plans to permit the establishment of a small scale of brokerage company which is required to have a minimum paid-in capital of 10 billion Won (US$10 million) beginning in April 1999. As of July 1, 1997, there were 38 licensed brokerage firms which were the members of the Korea Stock Exchange. The brokerage firms must be members of the KSE and be supervised by the KSE.

Foreigners may invest in a Korean securities company or form a joint venture with a Korean securities company as long as foreign ownership does not exceed 50 percent of the joint venture's paid-in capital. A foreign securities company may also establish a representative office or a branch to undertake securities businesses in Korea with prior approval from the MOFE. The proposed rule suggests that the restriction on foreign ownership in a Korean securities company will be removed. The proposed rule allows friendly takeover of Korean securities companies by foreigners.

§ KR:87 Investment Brokerage Business Under the Capital Market Act

The term "investment brokerage business" is defined as "a business making transactions in financial investment instruments, inducing offers, offering, and accepting offers for such instruments, or inducing offers, offering, and accepting offers for the issuance and acceptance of securities on another person's account in whosever named."[1] To engage in the investment brokerage business, the entity must register with and obtain approval from the Financial Services Commission.[2]

§ KR:88 Investment Trading Business Under the Capital Market Act

The term "investment trading business" is defined as "a business making transactions in financial investment instruments, issuing and underwriting securities, inviting offers, offering, and accepting offers for securities on its own account no matter whose name in whosever

VIII. RECENT TRENDS AND DEVELOPMENTS

§ KR:89 Financial Regulatory Reform

A lot of changes have occurred since the Asian financial crisis of 1997–1998. The most significant is financial regulatory reform. To better the efficiency of regulatory system and appropriate supervision of the financial market, the Korean government has restructured its financial regulatory system consolidating several regulators into one single financial regulator. The regulatory reform is designed to solve the problems that exist in the industry-specific regulatory system, i.e., lack of efficient cooperation and inconsistent regulatory philosophies among different regulators. For the above reasons, the Financial Supervisory Commission (FSC) was established on April 1, 1998. The FSC consolidated four financial regulators, the Office of Bank Supervision, the Securities Supervisory Board, the Insurance Supervisory Board, and the Non-bank Supervisory Authority. Several pieces of legislation were revised or enacted to accommodate the regulatory reform. The Bank of Korea Act was revised and the Act for the Establishment of Financial Supervisory Organizations was enacted on December 29, 1997 and the new regulatory system was created. The FSC, as the single financial regulator in Korea, currently supervises all financial institutions, including securities, banking, insurance and non-bank industries.

Under the structure of the FSC, the Securities and Futures Commission (SFC), a sub-committee, was established to supervise the securities and futures markets with the following major functions:[1]

(1) To investigate unfair trading and market manipulation in the securities and futures markets;
(2) To regulate financial accounting and auditing standards;
(3) To formulate policies regarding regulation and supervision of securities and futures markets to be reviewed and resolved by the FSC; and

[Section KR:89]

[1]The Financial Supervisory Commission (FSC) has promulgated the Rules on Operation of the Securities and Futures Commission (SFC), effective on April 1, 1998 [hereinafter the SFC Operational Rules]. The SFC is composed of the Vice Chairman of the Financial Supervisory Commission and four members, who are recommended by the Chairman of the FSC and appointed by the President of the Republic of Korea. In the cases of urgent circumstance as prescribed by section 12 (1) of the SFC Operational Rules, the SFC may delegate certain powers and tasks to the Financial Supervisory Service.

(4) To administer, regulate and supervise matters regarding the securities and futures markets empowered by the FSC.

In the financial market, Korean banks were attempting to provide universal banking services. In order to prevent another financial crisis from impacting Korea's financial system, since January 2002, Korea introduced the new BIS Capital Adequacy standards to improve the soundness of the financial institutions. Under the new BIS Standard, to determine the risk of the assets of financial institutions, market risk factors, such as the exchange rate risk and interest rate risk will be considered. Governmental supervision on the financial institutions, including securities and futures companies, insurance companies, banks and other financial institutions, has also been enhanced by the promulgation of the Regulation on Examination and Sanctions against Financial Institutions.[2] The purpose for enhancing the examination on financial institutions is to "induce sound management of financial institutions, maintain fair financial transaction order and protect customers of financial institutions."[3] The examination and sanction are conducted by the Governor of the Financial Supervisory Commission. Depending on the types of misconduct, sanctions following the examination could be against the officers or the employees of the financial institutions.[4] In order to impose sanctions against a financial institution, its officer, or its employee, the Governor of the FSC must establish a committee for deliberation on the sanctions.

In 2007, the Capital Market Act, consolidating several pieces of legislations regulating the capital markets, was enacted and implemented in 2009. The regulatory reform of the capital market is an ongoing agenda. The FSC, SFC, and FSS have been actively studying the issues arising from the regulatory system and have closely cooperated with international organizations in improving the capital regulatory system.[5]

[2]The Regulation on Examination and Sanctions against Financial Institutions was enacted on December 29, 2000 by the FSC (FSC 2000-131), amended on February 28, 2001 (FSC 2001-10). The purpose of this Regulation is to provide rules on how to examine the financial institutions, how to process the examination results, and what sanctions shall be followed. See Regulation on Examination and Sanctions against Financial Institutions, section 1.

[4]The sanctions against the officers of the financial institutions could be dismissal from office, suspension of business execution, severe disciplinary warning or disciplinary warning. The sanctions against the employees of the financial institutions could be dismissal from office, suspension of office, salary reduction, and reprimand. [5]For example, Korea has been actively participating in the global regulatory reform led by the International Organization of Securities Commission and contributing to the international regulatory cooperation, joining the survey conducted by and submitting recommendations to the OECD, World Bank, IOSCO, etc. FSS 2011 ANN.

§ KR:90 Financial Crisis and Foreign Investment

The Korean stock market turmoil in the late 1997 and early 1998 was caused by unhealthy economic conditions. Many companies, commercial banks, securities companies and the government accumulated huge debt liabilities which put them into an insolvent position. For example, Coryo Securities Corporation went into bankruptcy on December 5, 1997. Many companies are highly leveraged because of heavy borrowing from banks. Problems could not be discovered and solved earlier because of the non-transparency of corporate governance.

After the Korean financial crisis in late 1997, the expectation of investors as well as the obligation of regulators is that the MOFE will formulate and implement policies that will increase the visibility and transparency of the stock market as well as the corporate governance system. Before Korea signed the agreement with the International Monetary Fund regarding the emergency loan in December 1997, foreigners were prohibited from owning more than 26 percent of a single Korean company and 21 percent in a public company; any foreign individual was prohibited from investing more than 7 percent of a company's outstanding shares or 1 percent of a public company's outstanding shares. This restriction has been eased since then. The ceiling on aggregate foreign investment in a single Korean company is now increased to 55 percent, and 25 percent for aggregate foreign investment in a public company. An individual foreign investor can own up to 50 percent in a Korean company and 3 percent in a public company. The foreign investment ceiling is expected to be further relaxed. Currently, except for limited types of companies still imposes various investment ceiling, such as telecommunication companies, most restrictions have been eased.

In the wake of unsound and non-transparent managerial practices of many Korean corporations which contributed to the financial crisis in 1997–98 and in order to rescue and restructure the corporate governance system, the corporate and securities laws have passed several tremendous improvements by the amendments of the Commercial Act as well as the introduction of the Capital Market Act in 2007. To enhance corporate governance, the Commercial Act was amended to lower the threshold for shareholders to bring derivative suits against directors and officers who conduct wrongdoings or breach of fiduciary duties. Although the Commercial Act permits derivative suit when it was enacted in 1962, shareholders have rarely brought derivative suits because of the 5% shareholding requirement for bringing the suit and lack of incentives for investors. In the wake of financial crisis and new provisions in Commercial Act, the requirement for shareholders of a listed company to bring the derivative suit is to hold at least 0.01 percent for a minimum of 6 months.[1] For non-listed companies, the threshold is to hold 1 percent of the outstanding shares.[2] These amendments have dramatically changed the landscape of the derivative litigation and improved the corporate governance because more suits are brought against of directors and officers.

§ KR:91 Disclosure Requirements

A company intending to make public offering must file registration statement with and accepted by the FSC.[1] After a company has publicly offered its shares, it is subject to periodical disclosure requirements. Under the new Capital Market Act, publicly traded companies are subject to periodical disclosure requirements. Previously, only annual and semi-annual business reports, including financial statements, were required to disclose. Now, a publicly traded corporation must submit the first and third quarterly business report in addition to the previous requirements.[2]

§ KR:92 Establishment and Supervision of Financial Holding Companies

As the operation and management of Korea's financial institutions are moving toward universal financial services that provide one-stop shopping for consumers on financial products and financial services, Korea has promoted the establishment of the financial holding companies. The Financial Holding Companies Act (FHCA) was enacted in October, 2000.[1] The purpose of the FHCA is to promote the sound management of the financial holding companies and their subsidiaries and to prevent the possible side effect of risk-shifting or over expansion of the financial conglomeration and the universal banking of financial companies.[2]

§ KR:93 Financial Industry Reform

In order to balance the development and to enhance the competitiveness of the financial institutions, Korea enacted the Act on the Structural Improvement of the Financial Industry, which includes Banks and insurance companies are regulated separately by the Banking Act and the Insurance Act. However, the capital market, banking industry and the insurance industry are all under the supervision of the Financial Services Commission and the Financial Supervisory Service.
